H. E. ANDERSON.

DEATH OF EX-GOV. CROSWELL.

Charles M. Croswell died at his residence in the city of Adrian, at 9 o'clock last Monday morning, after an illness of few days. In his death the County of Lenawee loses one of her most distinguished citizens. His public record is a long and honorable one and his private life was without a stain. The following biographical notice is taken from the Times.

Charles M. Croswell was born at Newburgh, Orange county, N. Y., October 31st, 1825. His father was of Scotch-Irish extraction, who was in the paper manufacturing business in New York city. At the age of seven the future governor lost both parents, and an only sister, leaving him the sole surviving member of the family. He received common school training in New York, until he was eleven years old, when he came to Adrian in company with an uncle, reaching here in July, 1837. Here he learned the carpenter's trade, at which he worked with industry until he was nearly 21 years old. In 1846, he was appointed deputy county clerk, and while performing the duties of that position he began the study of the law. 1848 found him the candidate of the Whig party for county clerk; but the weight of the voting population was then with the democrats, and he was defeated by 100. Two years later the same party nominated him for register of deeds, and he was elected, serving two terms to the eminent satisfaction of all. In 1854 he was a member and secretary of the state convention held under the oaks at Jackson, when the Republican party was formed. The following year he entered into a law partnership with Judge Thomas M. Cooley, late of the supreme bench of Michigan, and in 1862 he was appointed city attorney of Adrian, to fill an unexpired term. He was also elected mayor during that year. In the fall of 1862 he was elected state senator, to which office he was twice re-elected. During his second term of service he was president pro tem. of the senate and chairman of the judiciary committee. In 1866 he was elected a member of the state constitutional convention and was a leader in that body. In 1868 he was one of the electors on the republican presidential ticket, casting the vote of the state, with his colleagues, Grant and Colfax. In 1872 he was elected a representative in the state legislature, and made speaker of the house, and he also served for six years as secretary of the state board of corrections and charities. In 1880 the republican party in the state rewarded his earnest and honest republicanism by electing him governor of Michigan by a handsome majority of 23,435 votes, in 1882 he was re-elected, his majority reaching 17,777. On the fourth day of February, 1852, Gov. Croswell was married to Miss Lucy M. Eddy, of Adrian, who died March 9, 1898, leaving three children, Charles Morton, Hattie and Lucy Elizabeth, all of whom survive. Gov. Croswell was four years a member of the city council as an alderman, and ten years a member of the city board of education. He was also the second captain of the old Adrian guards. At the time of his death he was the president of the Lenawee county savings bank, a position which he has filled for some time past with credit to himself and honor to the institution.

On the 25th of March, 1886, Gov. Croswell was married to Miss Lizzie Musgrave, of Charlotte, at the home of H. A. Ives, at Lansing, and he is survived by her.

The most important office filled by Gov. Croswell was that of chief executive of the state, and during his two terms of service many important public measures were secured largely through his influence. Among them were the following: A greater reduction of the public debt. Within the first two years of his administration $[illegible] of outstanding bonds were paid, $[illegible] invested in government bonds, and a sufficient sum collected besides to reduce the state debt, if the holders of the unmatured bonds would receive payment, from $[illegible] to $123,971 05. The practice of creating deficiencies for other legislatures to care for was largely stopped. Important changes were made in the state election laws, providing for the punishment of corruption and bribery, and the closing of saloons on election days. During the strike of 1887 there were prompt measures for maintaining public order, preventing the destruction of much life and property. The financial management of the Sault canal was much improved. Various public institutions were opened. Although he returned many measures for reconsideration, by veto and otherwise, such was his discrimination and good judgment, that in no instance were his objections overruled.

A meeting of the bar was held at Adrian on Monday afternoon, a motion was carried to attend the funeral in a body, and a committee was appointed to draft resolutions to be submitted at the opening of Court on Monday next. The funeral obsequies are held at the family residence on Front street this afternoon.

LYRICS OF BOSTON CULTURE.

When the winds are wailing with a wild and dismal wail
And the snow flakes are flying on the pinions of the gale,
When the Berry Atlantic billows, with a sullen, sullen roar,
Pound against the rocky shore,
When from the Polar regions comes the frost king in his night,
When we hear the storm fiends shrieking through the sable night,
When for the fortunate poor and lonely abroad states
Man seems the slave,
And the poor poor poets turn with fervent prayer
When, of anything to wear
Or scarcely to get enough,
It is then the gentle maiden wears a sealskin sacque and cuff.

He came to the door one night,
The door was in the rear right,
He was hungry, he said,
And he wanted some bread.
Would he good to get out of a scrape.

He had served in the cavalry corps
In the war for the Union, he swore,
Lost a charger dark white,
Was the first to reach flight,
And slaughtered his foes by the scores.

But to his appeals for a pension
The government paid no attension;
He was old and rheumatic
And half paralytic,
And his wives were too numerous to mension.

His case was a hard one, no doubt,
So some of the boys went about
And raised him a sum
That for some time to cum
Would keep him, and then he went out.

When he in the court was arraigned
Next morning the cause was explained:
He had waited the sum
That we gave him in rum
He has flew at the island pensioned.

THE MAN FROM TOM'S RIVER

Who Doesn't Propose to Allow an Enemy to Land on His Coast.

"You may have seen something in the papers about the coast defenses. The idea has somehow got abroad that our coasts ought to [illegible] Europe against declaring war against us some morning before breakfast. Engineers have surveyed and reported, and congressional committees have sat and reported, and for about $50,000,000 we can get things in such shape that when the enemy's first iron-clad heaves in sight she can be spotted in proper [illegible]

"A lot of us were sitting in the depot waiting room at Trenton, and the only man who had a newspaper was reading away for dear life, when a stranger entered with two sachels and a tall girl, checked the baggage under a seat, waited the girl to another and walked up to the man with the newspaper and asked:

"Mister, is there anything in the paper about our coast defenses?

"No, sir," was the gruff reply.

"That's singular. Have they given up the idea, do you think?"

"I don't know what you mean, sir."

"You don't! Why, they've been talking for the last year about building forts to protect our coasts. I live down near the mouth of Tom's river, and I rather expect they'll build a big fort there. The way things are now England, France or Germany could declare war against us and land a force at Tom's river before we had our eyes open. They'd land right on my farm, and nobody knows the damage they'd do. Don't see anything about a fort at Tom's river, eh?"

"No, sir."

"Well, that's singular. If this government expects me to get down behind a rock with my old shotgun and keep Europe from landing at that point it's expecting a heetle too much of one man. I'd fight to the death, of course, but the chances are that a hull navy could lick one high-spirited man. So the paper didn't say anything?"

"Didn't I tell you no in the first place?"

"Say, mister, you don't keer a copper about coast defenses," exclaimed the two-sachel man, as a red spot appeared on either cheek.

"Not a copper, sir."

"I thought so from the start! You live out in Michigan or Indiana or Illinois, and are tucked away in some holler where the sheriff can't find you, or else an Injun or two of our red skin. Oh, no, you don't keer!"

"Father," chided the tall girl as she laid down a book, but he turned on her with:

"Mary, you hush up! I've allus thought if Europe declared war agin us we'd have plenty of enemies right at home, and here's a case to prove it. Stranger, did you fite in the last war?"

"None of your business, sir!"

"There's his open land, gentlemen," said the two-sachel man as he turned to the crowd. "When you find a man who don't keer how soon the hull of Europe jumps on this country you have found a man who'd dig up the bones of Washington and sell 'em to a junk man for $1."

The man with the newspaper laid it down, got on his feet and asked the other if he would step out doors a minute.

"No, sir, I won't!" was the prompt reply. "In the first place, I've got these two sachels to purtect; in the second place, there's Mary; in the third place, I don't fight with no man who didn't fight in the last war. In the fust place, I asked ye if there was anything in the paper about our coast defenses."

"And I said no, you idiot!"

"And you said you didn't keer."

"Neither do I!"

"There's his hand agin, gentlemen! While I'm lying behind a rock at Tom's River, waiting to sell my life in defense of my country, here's a feller from Coon Holler, state of Indiana, who don't keer a cooper's copper how quick Europe kivers the site of New Jersey with the blood of our bravest men!"

"Father!" chided Mary again.

"Leaving alone, Mary! You know all about carpet rags and darning and housework, but you never heard the rumble of war. If Europe is going to jump onto this country I want to know who's going to shoot me in the back as I face the enemy."

The man with the newspaper opened it and sat down, with a dangerous glitter in his eyes, and there was a solemn silence for a few minutes. Then the Tom's River man edged over to Mary and they slid out doors together. Then he beckoned through the open window to three or four of us, and as we went out he surrounded us and whispered:

"Gentlemen, it's my solemn opinion that that feller is a jannsary from Europe who has come over here to coax Uncle Sam not to put up any coast defense. I want to say right here and I want you to hear it and remember it, that if the enemy lands at Tom's River it will be over my dead body, and I won't be to blame for it."—M. Quad in Detroit Free Press.

Bill Nye's Questions and Answers.

Compulsory Prayer.

"What is this I hear," said Mrs. Speed, "about compulsory prayer being abolished in Harvard? Did they use to compel the students to pray?"

"Yes," said young Speed, who had just come home from college on a vacation, "we had to go round three times a week. If a fellow couldn't get down on his knees he had to pray, and if he couldn't do that he had to stand up and pray."

"That's just right," retorted Mrs. Speed. "If a man can't pray in any other way, he ought to be able to pray on his knees."—Lynn Union.

TRICKS OF HORSE TRADERS.

A Horse Whose Owner Will Make Something If Victims Don't Squeal

"I've got a trick horse in my stable at this moment," said my friend, the veterinary surgeon and trader, "that will make me big money before people get onto his tricks. Snider's coming to try a trade with me today, and if you wait till he happens along you'll witness the finest racket. Ain't he's the Jim dandy now, as I'm a sinner!"

Snider is a milkman who varies the monotony of dairy devices by occasionally resorting to traders' tricks.

I make this statement on the authority of people who own thermometers and have swapped horses with Snider; not necessarily [illegible] probity or his public usefulness.

"How do, Snider? How's the colt?"

"No better, Doc."

"Guess I'll have to take him myself, Snider?"

"Bout the size of it, Doc."

"Gimme $50 to look and my new mar's yours!"

"Lemme hev another look at that new mar, Doc, 'fore I close."

The new mare was brought out and Snider went over her very carefully.

"She looks all right, Doc."

"Sound as a fresh egg, I'll warrant, Snider."

"I guess I'll risk her in other ways and go you. Here's the coin. Take the colt and gimme the mar."

"You gimme the colt and take the mar, Snider! That's the way to put it! Hyar, Lou, move!"

The Doc yelled this last at his animal and administered to her a vigorous kick on the flank at the same time. The mare, heretofore lively and obedient, suddenly stood still and planted her four feet in the soil as if she meant to take root.

"Take her off, Snider!" exclaimed the Doc, putting away his $50. "I'm in a hurry."

Snider proceeded. But the mare wouldn't.

He coaxed, he jerked, he slapped, he shoved, he prodded. The mare was as immovable as a stone fence.

Schemes of various kinds were resorted to to waken her up, but all in vain.

Then Snider, sweating and swearing, decided to give it up as a bad job.

He accordingly delivered himself of this unstudied oration: "Doc, you know well that if there is any—thing—on—this—earth I hate worse'n Satan, its a darned hackee. You've got one onto me this trip. Call the dicker off, an' say it's only a coal!"

"Can't think of it, Snider!" quietly replied the Doc. "A bargain's a bargain. Take the mar 'n git, 'fore you rile me with yer funk!"

"Take an' git!" exclaimed Snider. "Don't you see an airthquake wouldn't budge the brute. Say, Doc," he proceeded in a more conciliatory tone, "I'll drop $25 on the deal and never say another word about it. Come!"

"Well, said the Doc, thoughtfully, "I hate to give back good money I win on the square spec; but seein' it's you, Snider, here's half yer boot and the trade's off. Git back to yer stall, Lou!" and by a magic touch the balky mare was made to frisk into the stable without another word.

"As I was telling you, just before Snider came up, I want only a trick hoss whose tricks are worth something. I got that mar, Lou, down pretty fine in three weeks' lessons, ain't I? She'll make a pile for me if each sucker as he gets kitched on her doesn't squeal and give the snap too dead away."—Exchange.

Where it Grinds the Editor.

"Tell me, O Aristarchus, tell me, by, the shield of Pallas Athene, what find you in the exchanges this day that you briskly apply your never to be satiated and early devouring shears."

"Of a truth, O Mnestheus, the times go hard, for neither on the all thundering editorial pages, nor in the columns of the argus eyed local reporters, nor yet even in the from everywhere selected miscellany can I find matter worthy to be culled for our all pervading sheet. And, by the gods immortal, I do esteem it to be cruel fortune that at this time, when news is scarce and advertising slow, it is required of me to bring to the altar of the remorseless printers fresh and plenteous hecatombs of reprint!"

"You speak true things, O Aristarchus, wielder of the nimble scissors! But, by the dog, how hardly shall it go with me, who, when these papers bear me no word provoking pointers, am forced to sit me down to gaze at the four walls and to invoke of mendacious Mercury the aid which he alone with his inventive arts can bring!"—Eugene Field in Chicago News.

Too Old.

A young man with an expression of confidence on his face entered a Michigan avenue clothing store yesterday and asked:

"I am straight business. I want a suit of clothes. There are seven of us who will buy our clothes at the same place. I have been sent on ahead to get prices."

"Humph!"

"If I bring the other six here to buy, what will you make this $20 suit for?"

The clothier went over and sat down by the stove with a disgusted look on his face.

"You didn't answer my question."

How They Differ.

Men are strange creatures. They will waste an hour hunting a collar button instead of having an extra supply and letting their wife find the missing one. You never see a woman look for the pin she drops. Her husband finds it when he walks around in his bare feet.—Philadelphia Call.

He Knew the Meaning of Cards.

Our preacher has got about as many eyes in his head as mystery, and as he sat near my [illegible] to a deck of beautiful cards that the girls forgot to [illegible] and as he shuffled them carelessly in his hand he exclaimed: "Well, this is an age of pictures. I never saw so many, and some of them are too lovely for anything, but these are different [illegible] for young ladies!" I saw their cunning embarrassment and came to their relief. "Those are my fortune tickets," said I. "Oh, yes, I see!" said he, "this one with five spots represents a family of five, and this one with ten represents a family of ten." "Exactly so," said I, and the [illegible] so I will just take two or three of these home with me," and he slipped a queen and jack in his pocket. "Those, sir, by," said I, "are reminders of many things. There are four kinds, which reminds us of the four seasons. The spade reminds us that labor is a mighty factor in this world's affairs; the club that we must be aggressive and force our way; the diamond that money is a good thing to help, and the heart, that, after all, riches and labor and force are worth nothing without love. There are twelve of those picture cards, which reminds us of the twelve months in the year, and fifty-two cards in the deck, which tell us of the fifty-two weeks in the year, and—" "And," said he, interrupting me, "there are just 365 spots in all, which remind us of the number of days in the year." Right then I surrendered, for I saw he knew as much about a deck of cards as I did, and I [illegible] has played many a game in a grain field in front of his father's barn.—Bill Arp in Atlanta Constitution.

The HERALD extends its congratulations, not as a mere formality, but as a sincere desire for their future welfare. It is a most appropriate union, and will doubtless prove a happy one.

The Toledo Blade of last Thursday says: Wednesday night young Mr. McConnell arrived in this city from Blissfield, Mich., in search of his sister who left home about ten days ago, since which time nothing has been heard from her. He implored the assistance of the police, but up to the present time they have been unable to find any trace of the missing girl. Marija McConnell, whose disappearance is puzzling the police, is a handsome girl 18 years of age. She came to the city last week with friends and stopped at one of the hotels here. She left late in the afternoon, saying that she intended to visit relatives on the east side. Since that time nothing has been seen of her. People at Blissfield, Mich., and East Toledo are much excited over her disappearance.

TECUMSEH CELERY.

Dr. H. L. Stewart is receiving a large number of commendatory letters this fall praising his celery which he calls the "Bride of the Prairie." There can be no question but that the celery grown on his farm this season is superior in quality to the best Kalamazoo article. It takes the cake every time whenever it comes into competition with that of other dealers.

Among the letters recently received by him are these two which speak for themselves. The letter from the Executive Mansion is signed by President Cleveland in his own hand.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, Nov. 29, 86.

Dr. H. L. STEWART,
Tecumseh Michigan.

Dear Sir. Your pleasant Thanksgiving remembrance of a box of celery duly received, and I beg to assure you of my appreciation of your courtesy and of the excellence of the celery.

Very Truly Yours,
GROVER CLEVELAND.

NEW YORK, Nov. 11, 1886.

Dr. H. L. STEWART,
Tecumseh Mich.

Dear Sir.—Through your kindness I have to day received some specimens of White Plume celery very beautifully grown and deserving of the highest praise. We would like to use your testimonial to this variety in our catalogue, if you have no objections to stating by us your mode of culture of it. We would also like to know what you would charge for a dozen boxes, the same as those you have sent us, which we expect to use here in the City for advertising purposes. If you will also describe your method of culture we will be obliged. We notice that you call it the "Bride of the Prairie," a very pretty name, but we would rather you had adhered to the original name of "White Plume." But of course that is your own matter.

Very truly yours,

Smith & Hand have doubled their ice house, and they are filling it with a crop of beautiful ice. The ice is nearly a foot in thickness and clear as crystal.

We have received a copy of the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury. It contains some valuable hints and statistics on the subject of tax reduction.

A Candy Pull will be given at the Reform Club hall to-morrow (Friday) evening, for the benefit of the juvenile temperance society. Admission 10 cents and candy free.

Remember the Christmas Dance at Crothers' Hall, in Britten, on Friday evening Dec. 24th. A good time can be relied upon, for they always have good dances at Britton.

The church supper, given by the ladies of the Presbyterian church last Thursday evening, was largely attended and was a complete success in every particular.

Arthur C. Crossman has sent us a fine map of Holt Co., Nebraska. He is conducting a real estate office at Atkinson and is building up a large business. And thus the old Tecumseh boys thrive wherever they go.

F. A. Dewey of Cambridge was in town the other day and gave us a call. His son, Lyster, who is home from the Agricultural college for a long vacation, is utilizing his time by teaching school in the John Dewey district.

The L. S. & M. S. R'y will sell Holiday Tickets on Dec. 24th and 25th, 188[illegible], and on Dec. 31st, 1886, and on Jan. 1st, 1887, good going only on day of sale and returning, none good after Jan. 3rd, 1887, at half fare for round trip, except that no tickets less than 25cts. will be sold.

The soaking rain last Sunday afternoon interfered seriously with the temperance meeting. A fair audience gathered however, and Mr. Mills gave them a splendid address of nearly an hour's length. Mrs. M. P. Brown introduced the speaker, Mrs. M. C. Wood read a selection of scripture, Rev. James Wright offered prayer and Miss L. Gowdy presided at the piano.

G. P. Lawrence of Hudson has'nt brought any poultry, but he brings in a turnip that weighs 9½ pounds, and if any Tecumseh vegetarian can turn up a bigger one, Lawrence will move over into Hillsdale county.—Adrian Press.

Very well, Lawrence may as well turn up his carpets, pack his gripsack and move. A. K. Waldron has a turnip, raised this season on his farm, that weighs 11½ pounds and measures 36½ inches in circumference.

On Thursday last, while Wm. Smith was delivering milk at A. W. Mills' house, his horse started off to finish the trip without his master. He went about two blocks south and brought up on the sidewalk between two cherry trees, tearing the top off the milk wagon and breaking a wheel, thill and tug, when the owner overhauled him. Mr. Smith prefers to deliver the milk himself.

Will Harding's old Tecumseh friends will be glad to know that he is prospering. Witness the following from the Sangatuck Commercial of Dec. 3d. "Some forty or more of the young people of the M. E. church gave Rev. W. F. Harding a reception last Monday evening, at the residence of Mr. J. Doud, and as a token of respect and remembrance left him a handsome bound book of Burns' poems, a beautiful lilly inkstand, a plush autograph album, etc. They all speak of having had a pleasant time and no doubt they will be long remembered by their late pastor.

Walter Thomas Mills struck bad weather in Tecumseh this time. Monday and Tuesday evenings were both stormy and disagreeable, but notwithstanding this fact he was greeted with fair audiences on both evenings. It would be difficult to speak in too commendatory terms of his addresses. They were fair, logical, eloquent and convincing. Those who took the trouble to go felt themselves more when paid. The audiences were not what they should have been considering the ability of the speaker and the merits of the talk.

Santa Claus Ahead of Time

The Baptist pastor and his wife, returning from their teacher's meeting on Tuesday evening last, found the parsonage invaded by a large and merry company of their people waiting to greet them with evident delight at the surprise with which they were taken. A pleasant evening was spent, and the self invited guests retired leaving behind them substantial tokens of kindly regard, in money, clothing, furniture, carpet, bedding, flour, butter, potatoes, groceries, fruits, fowls, ham, and numerous other articles of family supply, a beautiful dress for Mrs. A. contributed by a long list of ladies, also an elegant Afghan, made by the "Temple Builders." Santa Claus evidently loaded out some of his most substantial treasures before the time.

A Medina farmer was recently swindled by a patent fence peddler. The remains of F. N. Albright, whose death we noted last week, were taken to Lockport, N. Y., last Monday for burial. His death was probably caused by doing without the necessities of life, as he starved himself and often went without fires in order to economize. He was a man of extensive reading, was well informed, and at the time of his death had means enough to have lived well for many years, but it was his hobby to live on ten cents a day, and probably his life was sacrificed to this hobby.—Hudson Post.

The deceased, we understand, was a brother of Mrs. N. R. Merritt, of this village.

There are in circulation various reports to the effect that the Alma Normal School has been placed under the management of the Presbyterian denomination. These reports are without foundation and have a misleading tendency. We wish to state that while the Presbyterian college is to be located in Alma some time in the near future, it has not, nor will it, in any way interfere with the work of the Normal; that the Normal is in a prosperous and flourishing condition, is rapidly gaining the reputation for excellence, which it justly merits and no change in its work is contemplated.

Ten years ago, Mrs. Ada Martin, of Brooklyn, Mich., broke her left leg, and paralysis of the limb and loss of speech followed. For some years past she found pleasure in making crazy quilts, sending to eminent persons for bits of cloth for the patches. Among others she sent to President Cleveland, who sent a patch and a neat letter. Mrs. Martin received the letter on Wednesday and was so pleased that she attempted to rise, and in so doing knocked her son's revolver off a shelf near by. The pistol was fired in the fall, the ball passed through Mrs. Martin's paralyzed leg, the shock restored her speech, and apparently the leg will be all right again after the pistol shot wound heals.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Nothing in the shape of literature can be more interesting than M. Meister Washburne's article on the downfall of the French Empire, which is to appear in the first number of Scribner's Magazine, to be published on December 4th. When it is remembered that Mr. Washburne was the only representative of any foreign nation who took the courage to remain in Paris during the siege and the Commune, and when the Republic was being established, they be well as a matter of fact that the days he has to tell of his experiences is of remarkable interest. Mr. Washburne has [illegible] with charming [illegible], and nothing in periodical literature will attract greater attention or appeal to a larger number of readers, than the papers the ex Minister to France has contributed to the opening number of Scribner's Magazine.

Catarrhal Deafness and Hay Fever.
A New Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research however has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever, are cured in from one to three simple applications made at home. Out of two thousand patients treated during the past six months fully ninety per cent have been cured. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent. of patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefited, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. In fact this is the only treatment which can possibly effect a permanent cure, and sufferers from catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever should at once correspond with Messrs. A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 West King street, Toronto, Canada, who have the sole control of this new remedy, and who send a pamphlet explaining this new treatment, free on receipt of stamp. Lincoln and His Mother's Grave.

In the autumn of 1818 the little community of Pigeon Creek was almost exterminated by a malignant form of fever called milk sickness, or, in the dialect of the country, "milksick." It is a very severe disease, which has been the theme of endless wrangling among western physicians, and the difficulty of ascertaining anything about it has been greatly increased by the local sensitiveness which forbids anyone to admit that it has ever prevailed in his neighborhood, although just over the creek, or in the next county, they have it bad. It seems to have been a malignant form of fever attributed [illegible] of poisonous herbs by the cattle attacking cattle, as well as human beings, attended with violent retchings and a burning sensation in the stomach, often terminating fatally on the third day. In many cases those who apparently recovered lingered for years with health seriously impaired.

Among the pioneers of Pigeon Creek, so ill fed, ill housed and uncared for, there was little prospect of recovery from such a grievous disorder. The Sparrows, husband and wife, died early in October, and Nancy Hanks Lincoln followed them after an interval of a few days. Thomas Lincoln made the coffins for his dead wife of green lumber cut with a pocket saw, and [illegible] all [illegible] a little [illegible] the [illegible]. It is related of Little Abraham that he sorrowed most of all that his mother should be laid away with such mean rites, and that he had several months thereafter been a wandering preacher named David Elkin brought to the settlement to deliver a funeral sermon over her grave, already still and white with the spotless snow. The Century.

The Old Spelling Book.

Examining a modern speller, the eye is pained by the lack of rhythm displayed upon its pages. For instance, upon one page of this book the word "fish" is found; then follow various words relating to fishing and fish culture; no rhythm whatever to please the ear or uniformity to attract the eye. "Fish, fishes, fin, head, tail, scales, line, hook, breeding, water, eggs, etc." The child masters "fish" and perhaps "fin." By the time "fin" is learned the poor "fish" has sunk beneath the waves of forgetfulness, and the heads and tails are about all that are retained in the mind of the child by this mode of misplacing words, as spelling lessons.

Now look at the old method, where the words arranged in couplets had, perhaps, no affinity, save in the matter of euphonious classification, "fish," "dish" "wish," "take," "make," "rake," etc. Now this method pleased the child's love of rhythm; it pleased the ear and the eye as well, and so was better adapted to his powers of memory, than is the present conglomeration of words, a tangle of monosyllable and polysyllable, in which the overtaxed brain of the poor little speller becomes inextricably involved, so that his early experience remains a sorrow and vexation to him his whole life long.—Boston Globe.

Gen. Thomas' Business Methods.

The soldier who was talking to me saw that an officer of high rank was present, rose immediately, saluted, and prepared to withdraw. "Sit down," said Gen. Thomas, returning the salute, "sit down and finish your business. First come, first served." And the general strolled into another part of the office, giving the soldier a chance to finish his story. It was soon told, and his wants being attended to, he took his departure.

Then, and not till then, Gen. Thomas came in. Taking the same seat that the soldier had occupied, he said: "Stick to the rule of first come, first served, and make your callers respect it. It is the only way to dispatch business, and the man who is not willing to submit to it is no gentleman, no matter who he is." I thanked the general for the advice, and laid it to heart, and often have I wished since that men in civil life who have come tearing into my office as though it belonged to them and to them only, had half the gentlemanly instinct that Gen. Thomas displayed that day.—Boston Budget "Saunterer."

The Poor Mad Ex-Empress.

The melodrama, "Juarez," produced in Paris recently, seems to have resulted in all kinds of misfortune. By some chance a paper containing an account of the first night of the play got into the hands of the poor mad ex Empress Carlotta, of Mexico. In a moment the whole of that terribly realistic tragedy in which she filled so pathetic a part twenty years ago came back to her mind, and with the paper in her hand, and wild, staring eyes she strode about her room, crying: "Juarez! Juarez! Here they are, all together! Maximilian! Juarez! Bazaine! A disaster is going to happen! Save my husband!" She was only calmed by being told that she must take a cup of tea while the train was being prepared which was to carry her to the scene of action. In the tea was a remedy which calmed her and sent her off to sleep.—The Argonaut.

Oldest Military Body in the World.

At a court of assistants of the Honorable Artillery company held at Armoury house, Finsbury, recently, it was resolved, on motion of Capt. Woolmer-Williams, "That the court at its next meeting do take into consideration the best means of celebrating the 350th anniversary of the incorporation of the regiment, occurring on Aug. 25, 1887." It is understood that the event will be made the occasion for great festivities, which will be attended by a representative number of the members of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery company of Boston. United States, an offshoot of the regiment which was founded by a member of the Honorable Artillery company of London, who emigrated to Boston in 1638—80 years after the incorporation of the parent stem by royal charter of Henry VIII.—Court Journal.

A Good Nurse

Should not hesitate to wait upon those ill with such diseases as Small pox, Cholera or Scarlet Fever. There is little [illegible] on the sick if they will use Dartys Prophylactic Fluid freely. In sick rooms it should be exposed on a plate or saucer and the patient sponged off with the Fluid diluted. For safety, cleanliness and comfort in the sick room the Fluid is indispensable.

The best medical writers claim that the successful remedy for nasal catarrh must be non-irritating, easy of application, reach all the remote cures and ulcerated surfaces. The history of all efforts to treat catarrh during the past few years shows us to admit that only one remedy has completely met these conditions, and that is Ely's Cream Balm. This safe and pleasant remedy has mastered catarrh as [illegible] and patients freely concede this fact. The more distressing symptoms quickly yield to it.

The pain and misery suffered by those who are afflicted with dyspepsia are indescribable. The distress of the body is equalled or surpassed by the confusion and tortures of the mind, thus making its victims suffer double affliction. The relief that is given by Hood's Sarsaparilla has caused thousands to be thankful for this great medicine. It dispels the clouds of dyspepsia and tones up the digestive organs. Try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

The combination, proportion, and process in preparing Hood's Sarsaparilla are peculiar to this medicine, and unknown to others.

A SAD DISASTER.

A Noble Structure Leveled to the Ground in a Few Hours--Thousands of Dollars Loss by the Ravages of the Fire Fiend--Nearly 100 People out of Employment.

Last Saturday morning, about half past 6 o'clock, some of the citizens of our ever sprightly little village were startled by the [illegible] bell, the quick succession of the taps telling but too plainly, that something unusual was occurring in their midst, and of so short duration was the warning peals, that comparatively few were [illegible] the usually [illegible] by such an alarm. They proceeded to survey the surroundings to ascertain the whereabouts of the intruder, and at once discovered, through the prevailing heavy fog, a light as all here in the direction of the woolen mill, whereupon they made rapid strides in that direction, and received there only confirmation that their conjectures were well founded, and as they gazed upon the structure, all in flames, with its employees making their escape, an overspread their countenances as they put forth every effort to aid the unfortunate in their exit from the devouring elements, within whose grasp it seemed impossible that some should soon become, and these efforts were not without avail, as it seems almost a miracle that no lives were lost.

The circumstances leading to the [illegible] are about as we could learn them, as follows:

[illegible] had been [illegible] the odor as of gas escaping about the building, and as the [illegible] was done by the introduction of gas, it was evident there was a leakage somewhere, and steps were taken to ascertain its whereabouts, but all of no avail. The night watchman, Andrew McFall, who has the care of the premises during the night, claims that the escape of gas made it difficult at times for him to take the [illegible] rounds, and he was [illegible] the way [illegible] of [illegible] from [illegible].

Upon entering the mill at [illegible] of clock, he was made to sight of a light, which was discovered that with the exception of those in one or two rooms, the place was [illegible] by flame, and "Tell" [illegible] was employed in one of these rooms was soon [illegible] with a [illegible] from the engineer. Upon hearing the general [illegible] the gas, [illegible] exploding that [illegible] and throwing the boy [illegible] distance, setting [illegible] on fire and burning his face, [illegible] and got shoulder badly. Some men observing his condition, rushed to the rescue, relieving him of his burning garments and carrying him to a place of refuge, and we understand, under the [illegible] care of Dr. [illegible]. Poor Tell is doing well and [illegible] are much in his favor. The [illegible] followed the escaping gas to the excavator and thus each room [illegible] that their exit was [illegible].

The corn sheller has arrived and been placed in the feed mill and works finely. With a few more simple but necessary improvements, and B. Nichols & Co., will have one of the finest feed mills in this section. The only thing that the patrons kick about is they never fetch bags enough to carry home their feed in.

The hardware firm of Coryell & Gripton have a full line of general hardware and have it arranged in a manner which presents a business like appearance. Tink keeps up a racket as usual in the manufacture of all kinds of tin ware.

On Saturday evening Mr. A. Russell of Macon, and Mrs. J. B. Freer of the village, were united in the holy bonds of wedlock at the home of the bride's parents, George Pocklington. The wedded pair left for their home in Macon, Sunday afternoon. At last the mentioned orange bud and expected blossom bursts forth in full bloom, and we extend our congratulations.

We clip the following from the Tuscola Co., Pioneer:

On Wednesday of this week Quincy G. T. Parker, of this city, and Miss Jennie Kilpatrick were united in marriage at the bride's residence, in Caro, and by the bride's father, Rev. Jessee Kilpatrick. The wedding was a very quiet affair, only relatives and intimate friends of the contracting parties being present. The presents received we understand, were numerous, costly and appropriate, among which was an elegant hammered silver tea set, presented by the bar of Caro. The happy pair left on the evening train for Detroit, and will return in a few days to Vassar, which is to be their future home.

The bride having been a teacher in the Vassar public schools only last year, is well known here, and by her many sterling qualities of both mind and heart, has a host of friends who will be pleased to know the "fates" have decreed that she is to become a permanent resident among us, and are only waiting for the opportunity to extend a congratulatory hand, and the best of wishes for the future happiness and prosperity not alone of herself, but of the newly wedded pair.

Mr. Parker is one of our rising young lawyers, possessed of a genial and whole souled disposition, and although having resided here only a few years, by strict application, perseverance and integrity, now enjoys a paying practice. That the couple may enjoy all the blessings that a generous and kind providence metes out to the deserving of the earth, is the sincere hope of the PIONEER.

If the republicans of the present legislature are in sober earnest over submitting a prohibitory amendment "on their own hook" they must surely be in favor of the same. Wherefore, they should first pass a prohibitory law which would "clear the deck" and give both sides an equal footing, as the sectional features of the present tax law gives the opposition the advantage. There is nothing in the constitution forbidding such a course. Then we the people, for greater safety, could amend the constitution provided, they would let us.

Two gentlemen of this city, Thos. Gagham and James Hart, have evolved a scheme for coupling cars, which, if successful, will be of great advantage to railroaders, and profit to its originators. We are not enough posted in mechanics to pronounce upon it, but it looks very feasible. It is so arranged that cars will couple by simply running together, and thus all danger to breakmen in coupling is removed. Another advantage gained in this coupler is that instead of drawing upon a pin as in the old way, the power is applied at or near the center of the car. It seems to be a very ingenious contrivance, and will be at once exhibited to experts to pronounce upon.—Adrian Record.

GOT THE BEST OF THE DOCTOR.

W. F. Beyer, Garretsville, Ohio, says: "My wife has been troubled with Catarrh a long time, but have, with what remedies we had, and what the doctor could do, kept the upper hand of it until this fall, when everything failed. Her throat was raw, as far as one could see, with an incessant cough when I invested my dollar in a bottle of your Papillon Catarrh Cure as a last resort. To day she is free from cough, throat all healed and entirely cured." Papillon extract of flax Catarrh Cure effects cures when all others fail. Large bottles, $1.00.

The proprietors of the Lake Mills would be pleased to see rain as their pond is very low.

Daniel Marr and wife are both confined to their bed with rheumatism. It looks as though the saying that "facts never come singly" might be applied to trouble.

The Excelsior Association of this place have concluded to have a debate once a week, which is to be next on Tuesday evenings.

Simon Shultis has moved into the house recently bought of J. H. Breese, in this village. Can't call him a country jade any longer.

Before this appears in print J. W. Kane will be a bachelor no more, as on Tuesday night he will be married to Miss Cora Winchell of Napoleon. Success to them.

O. L. Smith was passing around the cigars the other day. That's the way all the Onsted boys do when they get married. That Orrin and Annie may live a long and happy life is the wish of their many friends.

The Fence Machine Again.

An Ogden farmer, whose name we omit, but who lives near the Macon town line, was called upon some time ago, by a fence machine agent, who solicited Mr. Blank to accept the agency for his machine, offering liberal inducements. Mr. Blank thought he saw "millions in it" and accepted. To make the thing all straight, "just to show the company, you know," and under such palaver, Mr. Blank also kindly signed a paper which he understood would be in no way binding or obligatory. He soon found his mistake. Shortly afterwards another agent for the same company came along, and persuaded Mr. Blank that a fence machine was at the Blissfield depot, and demanded a settlement. Mr. Blank of course insisted he had never signed an order for the machine. The agent, however, [illegible] and Mr. Blank believed he didn't and would make earth to it. The two repaired to Esquire W[illegible] Saylor's residence and Mr. Blank took the oath. The agent then coolly drew forth a paper, and w[illegible] to be a bona fide order for the machine, with the genuine signature of Mr. Blank. Being confronted with this after taking an oath, Mr. Blank weakened and concluded the best way out was to accept the machine and pay the snug little sum of $[illegible] therefor. He probably will receive the machine, but Mr. Blank has $[illegible] worth of experience. It [illegible] but people must live.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSONS.

BY REV. DAVID H. BISHOP, D.D.

LESSON XII.

BETRAYED.

The events recorded in the lesson of this quarter form a matchless surpassing tragedy. The Roman family [illegible]

The first lesson tells us the story of Christ's betrayal in the garden by Judas Iscariot. The story is familiar to all, and will never be forgotten. We see Christ standing amongst His disciples and giving Himself up to the crowd which had come out to take Him prisoner. He is led before Pilate, and passes through a series of examinations and is exposed to the insults and contumely of the soldiers and mob. We note the fall of Peter and his awful denial of his Master. Judas goes out and hangs himself. Pilate, unable to save Him from death, tho' apparently anxious to do so, at last delivers Him up to be crucified. We hear the angry and exultant cries of the people as their hand hatred is victorious and the King of the Jews becomes their victim. He takes the cross upon his shoulders and starts upon his way to Calvary's height. He is nailed to the cross, and placed between two thieves, and is crucified. The universe bore testimony to His Divinity and the marvelous manifestations of the hour attested His Godhead.

On the following sunday His friends sought His grave, and found that the Saviour had risen from the dead. Though the grave had been securely sealed and carefully guarded, yet He had left its narrow bounds. The stone was rolled away, and only a pile of grave clothes gave evidence of His having been there. While Mary stood at the sepulchre Christ appeared to her, and sent her to preach His resurrection to the disciples. Observe, that a WOMAN receives this commission from the Master, who thus honors her sex.

Jesus appears to His disciples in an upper room, and afterwards appears to them when doubting Thomas is present, and convinces him that He is indeed the Christ.

On the shore of Galilee He appears to some of His disciples who were fishing. He tells them how to secure a large draught of fishes, and when they come to store, preceded by the irrepressible Peter, He asks them to dine with him. Then he asks Peter the triple question as to his love for Him, and gives him the threefold command. Thrice in the judgment hall Peter denied his master; three times on the shores of Galilee he confessed the Christ.

After a series of lessons of such thrilling interest it is fitting that we should consider John's beautiful description of Christ as the Light of the world, with all the blessings that such Light confers.

Then we come to the marvelous and splendid revelation of John contained in the Revelation: its wondrous visions and majestic descriptions and thrilling situations. We see the vision of Christ, full of glory and power. When no one in heaven or earth or under the earth is competent to open the Book which John saw, he is told that there is only One who can undertake it, and that One is the slain Lamb the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the Christ. Before Him the hosts of heaven fall down and worship and offer him ascriptions of thanksgiving and praise.

The Revelation, at its close, gives a beautiful invitation to the human race to come to Jesus and find in Him a full satisfaction, a free pardon, a complete salvation. "Whosoever will," can come to Jesus and be saved. O that all men might hear the invitation and accept it to their eternal salvation.

BROTHERLY LOVE.

Sat with his brethren once in a warm debate
About those things which each considered best
To bring to earth humanity and rest.

Then said the one responded to begin
"Rest comes from wealth, if there be peace within."

The second said: "It springs from high birth,
And having all men naught to your name."
The third said: "Rest is a thing of fame,
Coupled with power to do some mighty act."
The fourth said: "Such a rest as we present
Is a lady fair in the extremest age,
Wherever stands the power and humanity to Fix, children, and another children grow."
The fifth said: "All these rare things are good.
Rest comes to those who all the law fulfill."
Then said Rabbi Jutah, grave and old:
"Rest is a thing with nothing to do with gold."

To him who the traditions fail to keep
Now spoke the hunted boy up from the sea.
A boy of twelve, who heard the wise words repeat
And slipped from the room his face to hide.

Truest he only finds who go unsure
Looks not behind, but to the things before.
Who scorning fame and power and home and wife,
Loveth his brother as he loves himself.

THE STORY OF A MINE.

By BRET HARTE.

[Copyright, 1886, by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., and reproduced by arrangement with them.]

The two young people looked at each other. It was their [illegible] moment. "I think I have," said Victor, with assumed carelessness. "I think I have some of the old custom house paper." He produced from the secretary a sheet of brown paper with a stamp. "Try it on that."

Carmen smiled with childish delight, tried it, and pronounced it marvelous. "It is as magic," said Miguel, regarding her across himself.

"It is as magic," said Miguel.

Victor's role was more serious. He affected to be deeply touched, took the paper, folded it and placed it to his breast. "I shall make a good use of Don Jose Castro," he said, "he will believe it is the governor's own signature, for he was his friend, but have a care, Carmen, that you spoil it not by the opening of your red lips. When he is healed I will tell him of this marvel—this miracle of mine, and he shall pay her pesetas. Eh, little ogre!" and he gave her the avuncular caress, i. e., a pat of the hand on either cheek and a kiss. Miguel envied him, but rapidly out generaled Cupid, and presently the conversation flagged, until a convenient recollection of Victor's errand himself and comrade were due at the Posada del Tejon at 10 o'clock, gave them the opportunity to retire.

But not without a clumsy slap from Carmen. "Tell to me," she said, half to Victor and half to Miguel, what has caused with Conchita. He was ever ready to bring to me flowers from the mountains and meads and birds. Then suddenly has he ceased to visit my uncle, and talk to me of thy rare rocks he had seen, and the bears and the [illegible] and now he comes no longer. Conchita! How is she? Nothing evil has befallen her, surely?" and her drooping lids closed half pathetically.

Miguel's jealousy took fire. "He is drunk senorita, doubtless, and has [illegible] only the day, maybe, his mulleral [illegible] is this custom, ha! ha!"

The red lips of Carmen's opened [illegible] and she shut them together with a snap like a steel purse. The dove had suddenly changed to a hawk. The cloud had entered on the village. The sun [illegible] her face, of some shower [illegible] [illegible] Miguel.

ETIQUETTE OF NEW YEAR'S CALLS

A young married lady who wants to do the hospitable according to the most approved usage has written to the editor of the New York Sun asking the following questions:

1. Should a lady who is receiving on New Years call have a maid to answer the door bell?

2. How long should a wait elapse before the caller is invited to the refreshment table?

When would [illegible] be a proper lunch served without wine?

Would [illegible] chocolate take the place of wine with propriety?

The [illegible] these momentous questions were proposed made answer in the cautious manner that has always been a distinguishing trait of the fair sex. With the gentleman it reflect following: Unquestionably the servant ought to answer the bell. If the servant got drunk it would be well to know how the callers could get in. At houses where a great many calls are expected the servant is stationed at the door, [illegible] upon the first [illegible]

REPLIES TO AN IMPORTANT QUESTION

At a social gathering some one proposed this question: "What should a teacher teach her daughter." The following answers were handed in:

Teach her how to entertain a lover and the [illegible]

Teach her how to [illegible]

Teach her how to wear [illegible]

Teach her to make [illegible] the house.

Teach her to have nothing to do with intemperate or dissipated [illegible]

Teach her that [illegible] sinfulness as well as the [illegible] health.

Teach her to regard the opinions of adults and not mingle [illegible] associates.

Teach her to observe the golden rule. A place for everything and everything in its place.

Teach her that music, drawing and painting are but accomplishments in the home, and are not to be neglected [illegible] time and money for them.

Teach her the important lesson that the more she lives within her income the more she will save and the further she will be away from the poorhouse.

Teach her that a good steady church going mechanic, a farmer, clerk or teacher without a cent is worth more than forty loafers or expectant heirs in broadcloth.

Teach her to embrace every opportunity for reading and to select such books as will give her the most useful and practical information in order to make the best progress in earlier as well as later home and school life.—Charleston Courier.

TRIBUTE TO EX-GOV CROSWELL.

At a meeting of the bar, on the 14th inst., a committee, consisting of Judge [illegible] and C. R. Miller, was appointed to draft a suitable expression of the sentiments of the local bar, on the loss sustained by the death of Ex-Gov Chas. M. Croswell, with instructions to report at the next sitting of the court. [illegible] the committee [illegible] following tribute which was duly presented and passed upon the adoption of the court.

For nearly fifty years our deceased brother, Charles M. Croswell, was a resident of this city. For more than [illegible] years he was a prominent member of this bar. So long as he devoted his talents to the practice of the law, he demonstrated his ability to fill [illegible]

He was industrious, methodical and [illegible]. His legal papers were models of neatness, perspicuity, terseness and precision. He had, however, no real love for the active practice of the law. He was averse to contests partaking of a personal character, between man and man.

He was eminently a peacemaker in law as he was in other walks of life when it was practicable. The [illegible] of litigation avoided by his advice [illegible] was very large. He was the greatest of settling [illegible] a large proportion of the [illegible] for the [illegible] saving [illegible] to the parties.

[illegible] Gov. Charles M. Croswell this bar has lost one of its [illegible] and most valued members. [illegible] once further, the city one of its most wisest, most enterprising and [illegible] friends, and the state one of its most patriotic and [illegible] citizens. [illegible] and family our heartfelt sympathies in their great affliction. And [illegible] this memorial [illegible] copy of the same be entered on the journal of the court.

Alba Heywood, the impersonator, supported by a strong company of musical specialists will appear in a new program at the Opera House, on Tuesday evening next, Dec. 28th. His new dress and attractions enable him to give a better and greater variety of entertainment, while his new impersonations are especially amusing and realistic. He has spent much time in the study of new characters making almost daily visits to the Chinese Laundries, and by the closest observation [illegible] completed that difficult of all difficult impersonations. Wah Shing, the Chinese laundryman will sing the famous Mulligan guard, cut wings, chop sticks, sprinkle and iron clothes. The cost one for this novel act was imported from China. A fine display of character photographs may be seen at the Post office.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

Washington, D. C., Dec. 5th, 1886.

The second week of the session finds Congress grappling with a number of important questions. Among them are the Pacific Railroad funding, the Tenure of Office Act, the Indian problem, the Sundry Civil bill, Congressmen acting as attorneys for subsidized railroads, and secret sessions.

The House of Representatives declared emphatically that the Yellow Stone National Park shall not be desecrated by a railroad. There was quite a spirited debate on the subject. Hon. S. S. Cox thought the bill asking for such a privilege should be entitled a measure "for the spoliation of the National Park." It had its organized aggregate greed. Behind it, men and were railroad monopolists, and men who worked not in the interest of the people of the United States but for themselves.

Half a dozen Congressmen fought against the scheme were drawn from the ranks of the railroad corporations. Among them was Representative Kelley, of Pennsylvania, who, in all the years he has been in Congress, never has been known to vote against any measure for the benefit of the laboring men. He has been in Congress so long that he is now the oldest man in the House, save Mr. Kelley implored the House to stand by the sovereignty of the nation against any action which would encourage other speculators to ask the American Congress to allow them to invade that territory.

Naturally Senator Beck is indignant to find a substitute reported for his original bill prohibiting Members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employes for railroad companies which hold charters or land grants or other aid from the United States. Outside of the Senate and railroad circles the Beck bill is regarded as a measure that should have been a law long ago.

Contending for the consideration of his bill, the Kentucky Senator said it was indecent for Senators and Members to sit and vote upon measures affecting great railroad companies to the amount of hundreds of millions while having the money of those companies in their pockets. Public right and the honor of every Senator and Representative was involved in having the world to understand that no man was sitting in either House as the friend, or the retained attorney, or the agent of any of these subsidized railroad corporations.

It will be interesting to the old Mexican veterans over the country to know the exact condition of the Mexican Pension bill at this time. The House passed it and the Senate amended it so as to restrict the beneficiaries to veterans who have attained the age of 62 years. It is now before the House for action, but for some reason Representative Eldridge, of Michigan, Chairman of the committee which has the matter in charge, does not seem anxious to push it. Friends of the bill, unwilling that there should be any longer delay, propose now to press the House to pass it with the Senate amendment, and they are confident that a majority of the Members will vote in its favor.

Tariff conferences have been held during the entire week, held by the Morrison faction, the Randall faction, and the Republican protectionists, and much interest is felt in regard to what will be done in the House.

Mr. Morrison will ask the House to go into Committee of the whole to consider revenue measures, and this means that there will be a test vote in the House at that time to decide whether the propostion to revise the Tariff this winter shall be approved or rejected.

According to the new law governing the Presidential succession, in case of removal, death, resignation, or inability of the Vice President, the duties of the office are to be assumed by the Cabinet officers in the following order: First, Secretary of State: Second, Secretary of the Treasury: Third, Secretary of war: Fourth, Attorney General: and then the Postmaster General Secretary of the Navy and Secretary of the Interior. Consequently, official society is agitated over the question of social precedence. Who shall ride first and sit nearest the distinguished host, the Senator's wife, or the Cabinet officer's wife? It is a matter that could not be settled by haphazard concessions and so it has been suggested to the ladies that the eldest be allowed to go first.

Two notable women have lectured here during the week, on subjects pertinent to the interests of womankind. Miss Kate Field spoke for the emancipation of woman from the degradation of Mormonism in Utah, and Mrs. Jennie Miller talked for the liberation of all women from the bondage of bustles, whalebones, heels, high neck, and all other disabilities to women in the enjoyment of the present system of dress. Miss Field dispersed her lecture with passages of soulful loathing for the people who undergoing of a disagreeable relation were engaged in undermining the foundations of government and [illegible] the foundations in the present Administration, and believes that President Cleveland and Senator Lamar will grapple successfully with the treason in Utah.

A LITTLE FUN.

The only honest butter—the goat.

A young married man, whose house is paid by his mother-in-law, alludes to her as his darling pay-rent.

The sign of a barber upon a Parisian boulevard reads as follows: "N——, European barber. Gentlemen shaved in every language."

"Dere I have you," said the lawyer, who had been leading an examiner's fighting. "The question is, is mus too made or bor?" "Yes," said Pat, "mud bore."

Salmon [illegible] are fed worms, [illegible] and also of its time. In the [illegible] Solomon's wisdom would have been [illegible]

[illegible] "What's your business?" "I'm a plumber." "Young man, you need a clear head and a steady hand to be a good plumber."

A single subscriber writes: "A little plaguing mice wanted some ice cream the other evening. She won't be able to pay her mother's school, and is a little [illegible] she sent her to her father. The question was put to him, who answered: "Not much." She went back to her mother and told her that her papa said she could have a little."

Returned Traveler—Do you know I believe English will eventually be the language of the world.

Omaha Dentist—You think so?

"I feel sure of it." "Why, in the down town streets of Paris you hear almost as much English as any other language."

"It may be. I was in New York last summer, and it's so, there now, too." Omaha World.

A fair and buxom widow who had buried three husbands recently went with a gentleman who in his younger years had paid her marked attention to inspect the graves of her departed. After contemplating them in mournful silence, she murmured to her companion: "Ah, James, you might have been in that row now if you only had a little more courage."

"Charles! let us turn and go off some other way; there is that bad man following us." "Who is the fellow, my dear?" "Why, that is the man who came so near marrying me before I met you. I just hate him." "By jove, so do I." "You?" "Yaas." "You don't know him. How can you hate him?" "He didn't marry you, don't yer know, my love."

Mr. Winks—I see in your housekeepers journal a couple of lines which I think you ought to ponder, Mrs. Winks. It says: "If you always wish to be your scrape kettles with silver spoons."

Mrs. Winks—Oh! I never do such work.

"I hope not."

Lodger to chambermaid—Mary, this is the stillest house I ever was in. The landlord and his wife must live like angels in heaven together. I haven't heard one single sound since I've been here." Mary—"That's all very nice just now, Mr. Smith, but wait till they make friends again. They quarreled a fortnight ago, and they have not spoken to each other since."

"If I was to live my life over again," said an American defaulter, as he cocked his feet in the office of a Montreal hotel, "I'd be a lawyer instead of a cashier." "For why?" was asked. "Well, I embezzled $7,000, and am an outlaw and an outcast. My brother-in-law, who is a lawyer, 'managed' an estate so that it put him $48,000 and they have just elected him mayor of the town and got him to join the church. I advise young men to think of these things."

"Does your wife ever pay you any compliments?" asked Frederick Jameson of his friend Benderly.

"Never, replied Benderly.

"Well, mine does. She flatters me often."

"Oh, yes, frequently; particularly in winter, replied Frederick.

"Why does she tally you so much in winter?"

"Whenever the coal fire needs replenishing, she points to the fireplace and says, Frederick, the grate." Texas Siftings.

Strategy at the Matinee.

A gentleman at a recent matinee at a theatre was seated behind a lady wearing one of the fashionable tall hats. Finding the hat, however, not to be removed, he politely asked the lady if she would not remove it, but she did not do so. Finally, the gentleman, in a loud whisper, said to his companion, "Jim, I don't see why we should be obliged to look at the back of this woman's head, when we have paid our money to see the play." The lady, of course, heard the remark, and immediately removed her hat, and turned to the gentleman with a smile, saying, "Thank you, sir." [illegible]

DREAMS

Nay let them dream of perfect love,
It is the sweetest feeling the most fair.
This flower like joy that blooms in the soft air
Of youth's bright heart, with hope's blue heaven above

Breathe naught of disenchantment, do not bring
Misgiving to the bliss of blended souls.
The while life's brimming river golden rolls
Through primrose lighted pleasants of the spring

The blossoms of eternity be furled
In the dim binding bud of dreams that keep
A fluttering pulse within the swooning sleep
[illegible]

And the [illegible] the misty heights afar
Our boldest hope, that youth and dream we put Aside the idle toys man's that round upon doth
Up to the rose and to the morning star.

The Good Old Times in Maine.

Mr. L. W. Small has in The Oxford County Record some interesting reminiscences of the old Congregationalist meeting house of his boyhood. One of the quaint institutions was the arrangement of the pew seats on hinges. Mr. Small says that when the people arose for prayers and turned up the seats they made a noise "louder than thunder." The pulpit had a big gate which the preacher closed with a bang after he entered. The building was never painted or warmed. Women in delicate health brought little iron boxes of live coals on which to place their feet.

Mr. Small writes that the dedication of the edifice was celebrated with a horse race. The morals of those days could not tolerate a stove in the house of worship, but permitted going to a horse race and filling up with Medford rum. The singers had the front pews in this old meeting house, but during the singing of the hymns the musical people of the congregation used to go forward, stand as near the regular singers as possible, and help them out. Mr. Small remembers a gay widower who was wont to go forward in a blue coat with brass buttons, and had birch bark placed in the soles of his shoes so they would "speak and call the attention of all the women to his noble person. After awhile they organized a choir with a bass viol and a clarionet in it. A few Sundays passed and the conservatives in the congregation possessed themselves of the information that in some churches the choir was wicked to employ them in worship. The viol and clarionet had to go. Later on, charging that the leader of the choir was not a church member and ought not to sing a praise to God for the congregation, they banished the choir too.—Lewiston Journal.

Slave Riches of Sonora.

When we had passed the gulch the magnificent gorges around Hermosillo, climbing always higher and higher as we faced the dashing waters, and looking over the carriole wheels at a splendid roaring fall in a deep abyss, we came all upon a plain and saw the church of Bazagudi. Its pearly [illegible] rising in tiers one above the other, and covered from ridge to ground with shingles like dragon's scales, were outlined against the clearest blue sky, and with its dragon finials from every point, like a Chinese temple, it stood the strangest object one might expect to find in that lone mountain valley.

This architectural freak is a precious relic of the [illegible] century that the Antiquarian Society of Christiania now owns and preserves as an example of the old slave kirkes that were common in the earlier days before the plague robbed Norway of half its inhabitants and left these parishes desolate. It is preserved intact, the pine shingles getting the deeper and richer brown with every year and every renewing coat of varnish, and the interior a dark well lighted only by a pair of air holes high up. In the crowd of shingled gables one can trace a cruciform shape, [illegible] the eaves and so lowly reach to [illegible] quaint and bulging domes at [illegible] and the doorway carved with an intricate interlacing design and a Runic inscription scratched by chance just within the portal, it is a thing apart from all the rest of architecture.—Cor. Globe Democrat.

A Fall and a Rise.

A farmer who had been doing business with some one on the second floor of a building near the market yesterday made a slip at the top of the stairs and came down in speed with insight and was for the moment tender. He was taken into the office of a [illegible] for temporary examination of injuries, and as they opened his coat and vest and chafed his hands he opened his eyes and said:

"Boys, I believe I'm done for!"

"Oh, no—you'll soon be all right," they replied.

"Boys," he continued as he tried to raise up, "one of you go over on the stand to my old woman."

"Who is she?"

"Her name is Porter. There's a white hoss in the team. You'll know the wagon by a barrel of cider in the back end. There's also a crock of butter."

"We are to find Mrs. Porter and tell her you are hurt, and"—

"One of the horses is blind, and the old woman has got a red rag in her hat."

"Yes, we know." "We are to tell her that you are hurt, and"—

"And one of the fore wheels of the wagon has got two spokes in it," continued the man.

"All right, and we are to bring your wife."

"No, sir! You just tell her that I've broken both legs and four other bones in my body, but not to sell one pound or one of that butter less than twenty cents a pound. Butter has risen, and the old woman sits there crawing, goin on I don't know it!"—Detroit Free Press.

An Error in the Corpse.

A little high society in Boston. Two's father, a prominent clergyman, died mysteriously disappeared. A few days afterward a corpse was picked up in the harbor. This was identified by the police, went to the morgue, identified the body as that of his father and left an order with an undertaker to "box him up in good style." When the body was brought to the house inclosed in a handsome casket Tim took his sister in to see it. "That's not father," said she at once, and just then the corpse's under jaw dropped. "See, Tim," she said, "look at his teeth; he never had no gold in them." "True for you," said Tim, and then, "Here, you," to the undertaker, "take this fellow away," and, turning to the corpse, "You might have had an elegant funeral if you had only held your jaw."—Philadelphia Record.

Grape Cure for Obesity.

Grapes are now recommended as a remedy for obesity. A pound of grapes is given the patient to be eaten the first day, and this amount is increased till he can eat five or six pounds a day. Other food is gradually lessened and the diet at last consists wholly of grapes.—Chicago Times.

THE WAY THE EARLY VIRGINIA PRESIDENTS BOUGHT THEIR WINE.

Rum From Santa Cruz and Wine From the Island of Madeira—Evolution of the Virginia Ham—White House Meals.

Gen. John Tyler, the son of the president, who lives at Washington, has recently supplied interesting facts regarding the way the early Virginia presidents bought their wines. Said he: "My father's cellars were always full of choice wines and liquors, all of which he imported himself, as was the custom of the old Virginia families of his day. His brandy he bought at London through William Taylor of Norfolk, who was a noted wine dealer forty years ago. It cost $1 a gallon and was of a quality which you could now hardly get for $2 a bottle. His rum was imported for him in the same way from Santa Cruz, and his Madeira, which was the staple wine of the time, was brought from the Island of Madeira in the way common among the old Virginia planters. Every year my father would set aside ten or twelve acres for Madeira corn. This was a short eared, pearly grained variety noted for its hardiness. It was the only kind of corn at that day which would stand the long shipment across the ocean. Each of these acres would produce from fifty to a hundred bushels of corn. When it was harvested it would be sent to a ship which a number of the planters, such as Chief Justice Marshall and others, had chartered to carry their corn to Madeira. At the island this corn would be exchanged for wine, the rate being one bushel of corn to a gallon of wine, and the wine would be brought back in the same ship to Virginia. It came to us in barrels or pipes and we bottled it at home.

"President Tyler was a hearty eater," continued his gray haired son, "and he generally nibbled at dinner but a piece of bread, a cup of hot water tea and a slice of beef or ham. We always made our own hams, as the Virginia hams of those days were the finest in the world. Great care was exercised as to the breeding of the pigs. For the first summer and fall they were allowed to run wild in the woods, with a little corn in the evening and the morning to teach them the call of their master. During the first winter they were fed on corn, but were still kept out in the woods in the daytime, though carefully housed and fed at night.

"The second fall, when they were about 18 months old, they were turned into the corn fields, which had been hastily harvested and in which between the rows had been planted beans and peas. Until these and the fodder were all in, the hogs were kept in the woods. Then they were taken up and kept in selected pens, the corn of which had been hard and sweet, and Christmas with us they were killed and cured. The curing was done by salting the hams in brine and then hanging them in a smoke house made for the purpose and feeding them for several months with fires made of hickory chips. After they had been well smoked they were taken down and rubbed all over with sugar. The fat was now like white candy in appearance and the hams were ready for use.

"While my father was in the White House we never thought of cooking a slice of ham. The meats were always cooked in pieces, and a ham, a saddle of mutton or a leg of lamb was never cut before it came to the table. When you sat down to the table the meats were served up on it and you could see what [illegible] carved upon it. [illegible] it to a side table, where it was cut up and served with its appropriate vegetable. President Tyler's style of living was that of an English gentleman of the present day. His meals were served on the Virginia plan, he maintaining the same customs at the White House as on his Virginia estate. Daniel Webster used to say the only trouble with my father's table was the profuseness with which everything was served."—Frank G. Carpenter in Lippincott's Magazine.

An Opera Singer and a Bull Fight.

Madrid recently feted two of her most popular citizens. One is an opera singer and the other is a bull killer. Sixteen years ago Gayarre used to get forty francs a night for singing at a well known little music hall in the capital. Now he has just signed an engagement to sing fifty nights at the opera, for which he is to receive 250,000 francs. But one is accustomed to the ups and downs of operatic life.

The great bull fighter's experiences are more interesting. To the lasting sorrow of the Madrid public the great Don Luis Mazzantini is on his way to Havana. A banquet was given to him the night before he started. Two hundred guests assisted, and the toasts, the uproarious cheers and the patheticallow made the scene almost without parallel. The great man—who a couple of years ago was a small station master with a salary of 11 fcs. a month—is consoled in his regret at leaving the scene of his triumphs. He takes with him in ready money 50,000 francs, a payment on account by his impresario of the 150,000 francs which he is to receive when he has carried out his share of the contract. He is to cross the ocean to take part in eight bull fights and to kill a maximum of sixty-four animals. To add to the charm of the performances and to guard against all possibility of miscarriage Don Luis takes his victims with him. Sixty-four bulls were put on board the steamer at Cadiz and the chosen of an excited populace.—Pall Mall Gazette.

The general ticket department of the Lake Shore road has, for some time past, been contemplating the adoption of an entirely new issue of coupon tickets, replacing the old style with the patent kind known as the Stromberg ticket. General Ticket Agent Lane has at last finished his share from which the order for the new tickets will be taken, and it is expected in the first of the year the new style will replace the antiquated ones, some of which have lung on the books of ticket agents for a dozen years or more. The Lake Shore now has about 2,000 forms of tickets, and by the new system the number will be reduced one half.

The devil is apparently never so happy as when tempering with the proof sheets in a newspaper office. The Hudson Gazette is the latest victim. A "correction" from Rev. Woodmansee in the last issue says "It is not strange that with all your extra work during the jubilee week of the Congregational church, the devil should assert himself somewhat in your office. But it is not just the thing to make me say a whole sermon by the change of one word, which he adroitly does by making me say 'When a man has lived fifty years it is natural for him to look back over his past life.' as he has been a Christian, to note God's providences. How easy it was for him to change 'note into date.' It is just like the devil to sow tares while we sleep.

HIS DARLING WIFE.

My dear ... with M. Gregorio ... stances. It was at the close of a cold afternoon in winter. A sleet of sleet and rain burst upon us at the moment when, arriving from different directions, we drew up before the entrance of one of the principal hotels in Paris. Gregorio in a private carriage and I in a fiacre. He ... horses and drew up before the door of the hotel. It was precisely 12 o'clock. M. and Mme. Gregorio were returning from their drive in the Bois. I rushed to the window to see if possible this charming woman, whose name was for ever on her husband's lips, but I was too late; she had already descended from the carriage and Gregorio was in the act of lifting from the seat an enormous bouquet of magnificent roses. I saw the box a simply special combination, and started a pale of envy then and there. A second later the doors closed and the blinding glitter on the polished harness disappeared from view in the golden rain of the December sun.

Emerging, having missed for the second time so fine an opportunity for seeing Mme. Gregorio, I was struck upon the observation of a ... with such distinguished ... that I also drew back.

While ... I heard a voice at the door and looking up from my work I saw standing upon the threshold the handsomest woman I had seen this side of the Bois.

"And you are ..." she continued, "is it true?"

"Madame ..." I stammered, "I am ... I was unfortunate ... a bad ... I ..."

"Yes, yes, I know ..." she interrupted with a look of low disconcerting ... "Where ... Mme. Gregorio ..."

"Madame ..." I repeated with a look of low disconcerting ... "Why, I counted upon your presence ... Mme. Gregorio at breakfast. We are going away ..."

"Yes, I know ..." she interrupted ... "I have ... the Bois today ..."

"Madame ..." I said ... "I ..."

"Yes, I ..." she interrupted ... "I

One day last week, one of Tecumseh's prominent citizens received an invitation to attend a wedding in one of the neighboring towns. The day at last arrived and he started for the place of nuptials, well provided with the means to celebrate the occasion in a fitting manner. After arriving and after a hearty greeting he laid off his overcoat and found he had left his dress coat at home, "somewhere" in the house. This last, but not least, he felt, he must have. Now he knew that one of his friends was about his size, so he borrowed the coat of his friend, Mr. B. and then forgotten that his wife was with his friend, Mrs. B. and then forgotten that he was with his wife. The ceremony was over, the Kerr family of Tecumseh, Mich., arrived here by mistake on the evening train. The church service were held at the house on Sunday afternoon, Rev. Mr. Button officiating. Mr. Kershaw was the guest of the Parish Reform Association of our village upwards of 5 years ago. INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSONS

Lesson I. January 2.

THE BEGINNING.

Text—Gen. 1, 26 27, 2, 1 3.

Notes—"Let us make man."—This lesson begins with the second creation act of the sixth day. Note with what deliberation God contemplates the formation of Adam, red earth. It is his crowning work. In the word "us" we see the Trinity foreshadowed. Some take this to be simply the plural of excellence, but the following "our image" and "our likeness" points to a vague suggestion of distinction in the divine personality. "Our image after our likeness."—This does not refer to a physical form. God is a spirit. This is man's peculiar characteristic, distinction from all other breathing creatures—namely, that like God, he is rational, moral and immortal. He alone with God has a personality, and can say "I am." "Have dominion."—As God is supreme sovereign over all, so man made in his likeness shall also exercise authority over the inferior creations as his vice regent. "Subdue it." One of the two blessings man receives. The first is in common with the beasts, the power of multiplication, the second raises him infinitely above them. Both are in the form of a command. Skilled labor after the best scientific methods is joined here, so as to bring the forces of Nature under control and man's faculties to their most profitable uses and to the best advantage. This implies such labor and persistence as was in the "six days." The days of Genesis are reckoned from morning to morn. The contrary to the Jewish custom of the same word day represents a period of time, till the successive stages of work in man. No [illegible] new physical law [illegible] time. [illegible] added since this word [illegible] last of these. It expresses the divine means army, everything [illegible] infinite wisdom, power and wisdom are [illegible] constructing. The delicately adjusted machinery is ready for the [illegible] "Let there be light" [illegible] It was all ended on the evening of the sixth day. The rest of the seventh ushered in the day of consecration. God's rest is not that of inactivity, for he continually governs and upholds his creation. From this important occupation from the [illegible] years and particular work of creation. "Blessed and sanctified."—This hallowing and setting apart of one day out of seven has reference to the immediate effect. [illegible] To-day we begin a new year's course of lessons. Never before has so much [illegible] been given to Sunday school work. Recent critical and apologetic literature is [illegible] the unusual research which has [illegible] the early history of the human race and of things. The lessons of this quarter are all taken from the books of Moses and with the days before the flood, the "days of Abraham" and "days of Jacob."

For the teachers a good helpful book on Genesis is valuable but not [illegible] Perhaps more so is Bishop [illegible] the Speaker's Commentary, edited by the Canon Cook. Cook's Holy Bible with the Bible covers the history of the times admirably.

The first five books of the Bible are known as the Pentateuch, a Greek name meaning "The five fold book" given by the Greek translators, 200 B. C. The Jews know them as the Torah or the Law. The chronology of the first chapters of Genesis is unknown though many have speculated upon it as well as the location of the garden of Eden.

We must remember at the outset that the Jewish people lived surrounded by idolatrous people worshipping many gods, polytheists, and practicing every indecency in their worship. The revelation of the one God comes as a [illegible] light from above. The inspired authors [illegible] the traditions of the nations, as our inspiration [illegible] the whole. The state of the heavens is not a scientific treatise, but it is to teach religious truths, underneath the work, the unity of God, and the dignity of man. Look at the lessons of the chapter in this light, and observe how it hand modding as superstitious, [illegible] people into a God fearing nation.

"ENGLISH AS SHE IS SPOKE"

THE STORY OF A MINE

By BRET HARTE.

[Copyright 1886, by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., and published by arrangement with them.]

The United States lost! What it meant ruin and destruction to the "Blue Mass Company" who had bought from a paternal and beneficent government lands which didn't belong to it. The Mexican grant, of course, antedated the occupation of the mine by Concho, Wilks, Pedro, et al., as well as by the "Blue Mass Company," and the solitary partners, Biggs and Thatcher. More than that, it swallowed up their improvements. It made Biggs and Thatcher responsible to Garcia for all the money the grand master of avarice had made out of it. Mr. District Attorney was apparently distressed, but resigned. Messrs. Biggs and Thatcher were really distressed and combative.

And then, to advance a few years in this chronicle, began real litigation with earnestness, vigor, courage, zeal and tactics on the part of Biggs and Thatcher, and technicalities, delay, equivocation and a general Fabian-like policy on the part of Garcia, Roscommon, et al. Of all these tedious processes I note but one, which for originality and audacity of conception appears to me to indicate more clearly the temper and civilization of the epoch. A subordinate officer of the district court refused to obey the mandate ordering a transcript of the record to be sent up to the United States supreme court. It is to be regretted that the name of this Ephesian youth, who thus fired the dome of our judicial liberties, should have been so unfortunate as to be confined to the dusty records of that doubtful court of which he was a doubtful servitor, and that his claim to immortality ceased with his double-faced service. Two or three stalwarts stands on record a letter by this young gentleman, arraigning the legal wisdom of the land, which is not entirely devoid of amusement or even instruction to those, even desirous of obtaining publicity and fame. However, the supreme court was compelled to protect itself by procuring the [illegible] of his functions out of its loyal [illegible] to the larger future of its own attorney.

The [illegible] processes of law and equity, which [illegible] practically in the affairs of ordinary business, might have [illegible] period of [illegible] or nine years. But the strong arm of [illegible] Thatcher held possession, and [illegible] by the same tactics employed on their side, repelled or wearied counterment, and [illegible] their opponents were spending gold and Biggs merely lay in the interminable of his armor, felt in the lists, his clack giving [illegible] himself to his opponent [illegible] and passing, as it were, made over his plate [illegible] to his [illegible] (What [illegible] Thatcher [illegible] stand.

To begin with Roscommon. To do justice to his later conduct and position, it must be remembered that when he accepted the chairmanship of the "Blue Mass Company" and the mortgage from the Junta of Concho, he was [illegible] had [illegible] trouble. He was and still had [illegible] the [illegible] of [illegible] to the [illegible] and [illegible] drinker, yet with the distinguished distinction, perhaps, of being the [illegible] of a family of [illegible] pelling [illegible] his wives, rather than the various [illegible] he had lost. To the [illegible] it was [illegible] that the "Blue Mass Company" was making money out of a mine which he [illegible], and which was [illegible] to them. Every dollar they took was a fresh fount in this grand [illegible] it. Every step towards this adjustment, [illegible] which made by his own hands, was a personal wrong. The [illegible] never was, he had been [illegible] property—[illegible] him for a mere consultant only [illegible] enough. The possibility [illegible] affected him [illegible] greatly [illegible] the mine. I need hardly say that I have indicated [illegible] that, moved proper [illegible] of mankind to get something from nothing, and to acquire the largest [illegible] for the least possible expenditure, but I question my right to say that Roscommon was much more responsible than his fellows.

But it told upon him, as it did upon all over whom the spirit of the murdered Concho brooded—upon all whom avarice alternately flattered and tortured. From his quiet gains in his legitimate business, from the little capital accumulated through industry and economy, he lavished thousands on this chimera of his fancy. He grew grizzled and worn over his self-imposed delusion; he no longer jested with his customers, regardless of quality or station or importance, he had [illegible] to modify, on quites to please [illegible] to reward. The grocery suffered, through giving food and refreshment to [illegible] and to [illegible] the land commission and the district court. Mrs. Roscommon found herself losing money. Even the bar fabric there was a party of "Blue Mass" employés who drank at Roscommon's expense, and cursed the Roscommon claim over the liquor. The calm, the hope of indifference with which Roscommon had served his customers was gone. The towel was no longer used after the perfunctory fashion. The [illegible] remained unwiped, the disks of mountain glasses marked its surface, and the usual other preparation on the part of the proprietor. The loyal gray eyes of Roscommon, of the "Red Rock Ranche," were no longer the look out for frequent [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

TEMPERANCE DOTS

Dr. Guthrie says: "I have four reasons for being an abstainer, viz. 1. My health is stronger. 2. My head is clearer. 3. My heart is lighter. 4. My purse is heavier."

A saloon keeper remarked that he never allowed his son to enter the bar room. On hearing this a young man who had been a hard drinker said, "If the rum seller will not permit his son to enter the bar room I never will enter it again." Rum keepers, if this saloon, the pool room and bowling alley are not safe places for your sons, they are not safe places for others.

The [illegible] Santa Claus brought it.

James Wright of Britton. The wedding was a quiet affair, only the relatives and most intimate friends being present. The gifts were very appropriate for new beginners as pioneers in the matrimonial state, allowing an old bachelor to judge from his stand point. After the usual congratulations were extended to the happy couple, refreshments of a very delicate nature were served, and then they left on the evening train for ——. Mr. Anderson will take his happy wife to Ionia to live as he is the manager of the hardware firm of H. B. Webber.

Too "muchee" snow.

Wm. Stephenson and wife started Tuesday last to make 2 or 3 days visit south of Jackson.

The M. E. church social and free supper on New Year's Eve was a success. The recitations and readings were rendered nicely, while the instrumental music by Hattie Daniels and songs by Miss Billmeyer and A. J. Monaghan was excellent. Mrs. Anson Avres read a piece on the closing year. It was appropriate and well read. Clara Richardson in a character recitation, did exceedingly well.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

Brooklyn had its usual Christmas festivals and the Presbyterian Sabbath school held fast to its resolution and bought coal for Mrs. Lester instead of church evergreens.

If pennies can represent little acts of kindness, Gov. Alger has some small disciples among the class he befriends. Merry Christmas is spoken in subdued tones by some older people, however. A bridge of sighs extends to the coming New Year, built chiefly by those who dread the long wintry interruption of employment. They almost envy Clinton for having had a mill to loose. If we only had a something to give us work in the winter, is the time honored plaint, and then they look longingly at business facilities utilized by sister towns, and ignore the fact that a coal-mine underlies Vineyard lake lands, which requires little besides push and pick to develop and furnish every one of them with all the smut glazed comforts coveted. The far-sighted wisdom that rejected Mr. Cook's proposed gift to the state blurs this near-by advantage. The existence of the mine is no secret. A blacksmith of this village used this coal in making tools twenty-two years ago, and affirms it free from sulphurous impurities and equal to the best. T. Sheridan, an experienced miner, has said no better is found in Pennsylvania. It extends a long distance and even comes to the surface in one place, and waits to be gathered. While it is not probable that promiscuous digging, without method, would be tolerated, Knights of labor desirous of improving it systematically would doubtless be accorded both encouragement and aid, for it has never been the owners policy to retard industrial enterprise. The capital is already invested in this case. All that is required to form a stock company, is labor, and if men are unwilling to furnish that, and pay a fair royalty on amount mined, they ought to complain less of hard times and want of work. We hear a great deal of the crushing power of the boycott, and Detroit brewers, winning under its aplication, made doubly vexations by seeing their lost patronage transferred to new favorites. But brewers have little to fear while working men boycott opportunities within reach and only change the sponge that absorbs wages without yielding any equivalent save want and idleness.

Lesson 2. January 9.

SIN AND DEATH.

Text—Gen. iii. 1-9. 17-19.

Notes—NOW THE SERPENT. The ancient Babylonians recognized an evil influence in the shape of a serpent, and several cylinders have been found that show the serpent. The Egyptians held it in reverence with many other animals, while to the Israelites the serpent was always an object of abhorence. —HE SAID UNTO THE WOMAN—He addresses the woman first as the weaker, the one easier tempted. Beginning the conversation colloquy, he assumes an air of surprise, and ends by looking at the few restrictions rather than at the wide range of privileges. Dissatisfaction and doubt came to the woman as an immediate result.—AND THE WOMAN SAID.—She evidently took him to be a divine messenger; yet the substance of what he said ought to have put her on her guard, since he spoke at enmity with God. Notice how her mind, wandering over the "every" and "freely," words of God, showing his large beneficence, is morbidly fastened on the restrictions. She went so far as to wilfullly misquote God's divine command, and moreover, she made two additions not recorded in it. —YE SHALL NOT SURELY DIE.—The serpent sees the woman already wavering, and he encourages her to side with him in assent, while he flatly gives God the lie. Distrust of God is aroused, while he had a semblance of truth, since she died not immediately a physical but a spiritual death.—GOD DOTH KNOW.—Bolder and bolder he grows as Eve becomes weaker. Now he represents God as envious of his creatures, and how he inflames her ambition to become AS GOD himself.—KNOWING GOOD AND EVIL.—The knowledge that was to make them independent of God.—WHEN THE WOMAN SAW.—Three times it is mentioned how charming the tree appears to her as she gazes with new eyes and lustful glance. She yielded and fell, and in her fall she involved the one dearest to her. The woman was deceived, but man (1 Tim. ii. 14) fell with open eyes. The last three verses of the lesson speaks God's curse for disobedience. This disobedience was twofold. 1. Harkening to the seductive voice. 2. Actively engaging in the sin. The one prepares the way; is introductory to the other. The curse is that of desolation and barrenness instead of fruitfulness and fertility; of coarse food instead of former delicacies. Excessive toil for the very necessities of living takes the place of Eden comfort and ease; and the sentence culminates with the doom of bodily decay and death.

INSTRUCTION.—In the first place the serpent attacked the weaker one of the two, the woman, and that in her husband's absence. Would that women only knew how much depends on their withstanding crucial as well as every day temptations, and how the men look to them for guidance and moral strength. If the women we reverence falls, then where is faith? If you are a sister, encourage your brother in all purity, honor, and fidelity to God. You show him the way, and never let him be dissappointed in you. The wife needs this steadfastness to godly principles in a peculiar degree, that she be not influenced to do or countenance the wrong, and you mothers must so act that your children may believe you implicitly, and follow you unquestionably wherever you lead them. You can't do it alone, any more than Eve could. You follow faithfully yourselves the Christ and the children will be led all right enough.

Then SHE LISTENED. That is the first step down hill, to hear what the tempter has to say. "When sinners entice thee consent thou not." Don't listen, don't stop, just get right away, even if you have to jump over a fence or out of the window. Better break a limb than sear your conscience. It is safer and more comfortable in the long run.

Listening often implies dissatisfaction with every-day goodness and a hankering after the excitements the Devil offers. See how Eve persistently disparaged her splendid privileges and overated her restrictions. The poison works fast when one harkens to Satan.

Moreover she LOOKED AT THE TREE. This is the next and most dangerous step, to so yield to persuasions as to look into the matter and see if it is wrong or not. The conscience tells all about that, and if ever in doubt, then let the doubtful alone. It is a fallacy of the Devil to think that one can appreciate the good better by looking at, knowing, and experiencing the evil. Every contact with the Evil One leaves one the worse for it. If you would be pure let alone, and stick to the right.

Of course she fell. One does not parley with Satan for nothing. Naturally she did not want to be the only sinner in the world, so she invited the only one she could get to share her guilt. Not only unconscience influenes but personal solicitation drags many a one down. If you must sin coop yourself up in a hut, lock yourself in, and do it alone. Do not dare to drag down in your destruction an immortal soul.

Answer this question to yourselves this week. Is it not more pleasant to lie down in green pastures and walk along still waters under His leadership than to struggle along among thorn and thistle of our own planting?

CHRISTMAS VISIT.

Invited as usual out to H. B. Case's in Cambridge.

I left Tecumseh Friday morning, the 24th on the M. & O. road for Onsted, arrived at my journeys end about 11 o'clock. After dinner I took a strole through his barns and stock yards. The first containing 42 fat beeves, principly 3 years old, the nicest beeves that I ever saw; some weighing 1900 lbs., all for eastern markets, also a flock of 120 sheep. Thence to view the porkers. 41 hogs very fat, will weigh from 200 to 400 lbs. Thence back to the house.

Saturday morning nothing but the Christmas tree. About 11 o'clock the invited guests commenced to arrive from Adrian, Franklin, Springville, Brooklyn and Napoleon; about 40 in all, anxious eyes to get a peep at the Christmas tree, among the little ones. When all were warmed and through with the Christmas greetings, we were all invited into the spacious dining room to take a view of the well loaded table, turkey, oysters, pies and cakes too numerous to mention. You may be assured when we left the room there was not much danger of the table breaking down. The folding doors thrown wide open giving a view into the parlor and Christmas tree loaded down with presents. Three of the choicest presents were standing under the tree, consisting of 3 secretarys, made of walnut, given to the son and two sons-in-law. The presents all amounted to over $100, such as dresses, shawls, towels, hats, caps, boots and shoes, everything of value except a few notions for the little ones. When the party left for their homes, they were all invited to be there next Christmas if alive.

Mr. and Mrs. Case intend to have the same enjoyment yearly, while they are permitted to live.

GOOD ENOUGH FOR HIM.

Mr. Asa B. Rowley, Druggist, was induced to try some of the Papillon Catarrh Cure by his customers, after several physicians predicted he would soon have consumption from an aggravated case of Catarrh. Papillon (extract of flax) Catarrh Cure will do all that is claimed for it. Large bottles $1.00.

Frank Swick spent holiday week at Ionia with his friend LaVern Wheeler. He enjoyed his visit there very much.

DEATH OF GEN LOGAN

...and soldiers has been gilded ... reward. Before this issue of the paper reaches our readers they will have learned the full particulars ...

...ply take this occasion to add our feeble tribute to his memory. He was a typical American, brave, strong and generous, renowned alike in the field and forum. He was the last of the volunteer generals during the war, a statesman and a patriot ... He was the ... in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic and was twice elected to that high position. Death makes a levy with the great men of America during 1886, but among them all none will be more sincerely mourned ... Logan.

The announcement of General John A. Logan's death, following close upon the first intimation the public had of his serious illness, will cause universal regret, not more among his political associates than among those who opposed him. He was one of the most picturesque figures in recent politics—a positive personality, always bold and aggressive in the forum as in the field, and commanding respect by his honesty, courage and manliness even when wrong-headed and mistaken.

Logan was an admirable type of the Western soldier and politician. Without military training, his personal force and energy and undaunted courage made him a most successful soldier, and the same qualities that had distinguished him in the field gave him success in political life, his self-confidence commanding the confidence of his followers and giving him a rough-and-ready adaptability to duties from which a man of larger mental equipment might have shrunk. He came into prominence in the hot struggle of the civil war and the intensity and force of his sense of partnership that bound to that time he never outgrew. He was necessarily sank from actual leadership, but as one of the "old guard" he retained a place in the popular affection, and in the last Presidential contest the second name on the Republican ticket was stronger than ...

THE [illegible] OF A MINE.

T. BRET HARTE.

[Copyright, 1886, by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., and [illegible] by arrangement with them.]

Nevertheless, she painted a sketch for Thatcher—[illegible] it now adorns the company's office in San Francisco, in which the property is laid out in pleasing geometrical lines, and the rosy promise of the future instinct in every touch of the brush. Then, having earned her wages, as she believed, she became somewhat cool and shy to Thatcher. Whereat that gentleman redoubled his attentions, saying only in her presence a certain emprise, which concerned her more than himself. The niece of his enemy meant nothing more to him than an interesting girl, to be protected always—to be feared, never. But even shepherds may be insidiously pierced in noble minds.

Mistress Plodgitt, thus early estopped of matchmaking, of course put the blame on her own sex, and went over to the stronger side—this morn.

"It's a great pity girls should be so curious," she said, sotto voce, to Thatcher, when Carmen was in one of her sullen moods. "Yet I s'pose it's in her blood. Them Spaniards is always revengeful—like the Eyetalians."

Thatcher honestly looked his surprise.

"Why, don't you see, she's thinking how all those land's might have been her uncle's but for you. And instead of trying to be sweet and—" here she stopped to cough.

"Good God!" said Thatcher, in great concern, "I never thought of that." He stopped for a moment, and then added with decision: "I can't believe it; it isn't like her."

Mrs. P. was piqued. She walked away, delivering, however, this Parthian arrow:

"Well, I hope I can't nothing worse."

Thatcher chuckled, then felt uneasy. When he next met Carmen she found his gray eyes fixed on hers with a curious, half inquisitorial look she had never noticed before. This only added fuel to the fire. Forgetting their relations of host and guest, she was absolutely rude. Thatcher was quiet but watchful; got the Plodgitt to bed early, and, under cover of showing a moonlight view of the "Last Chance Mill," lassoed Carmen out of earshot, as far as the dismantled furnace.

"What is the matter, Miss De Haro; have I offended you?"

Miss Carmen was not aware that anything was the matter. If Don Royal quarreled with old friends, whose loyalty of course he knew, and who were above speaking ill against a [illegible] he preferred their company to false friends—why—the masculine reader will observe this tremendous climax and trouble—why she didn't know, why he should blame her.

They turned and faced each other. The conditions for a perfect misunderstanding could not have been better arranged between two people. Thatcher was a masculine reasoner, Carmen a feminine feeler—it may be pardoned the expression. Thatcher wanted to get at certain facts and argue therefrom. Carmen wanted to get at certain feelings and then fit the facts to them.

"But I am not blaming you, Miss Carmen," he said gravely. "It was stupid in me to confront you here with the property claimed by your uncle and occupied by me, but it was a mistake—not" he added hastily, "it was not a mistake. You knew it and I didn't. You overlooked it before you came, and I was too glad to overlook it after you were here."

"Of course," said Carmen pettishly, "I am the only one to be blamed. It's like you men, Mom. She was just fifteen, and uttered this awful resume of experience just as if it hadn't been taught to her in her cradle."

Feminine generalities always stagger a man. Thatcher said nothing. Carmen became more enraged.

"Why did you want to take Uncle Victor's property, then?" she asked triumphantly.

"I don't know that it is your uncle's property."

"You—don't—know! Have you seen the application with 'Governor Micheltorena' indorsement? Have you heard the witnesses?" she said passionately.

"Signatures may be forged and witnesses lie," said Thatcher quietly.

"What is it you call forged?"

Thatcher instantly recalled the fact that the Spanish language held no synonym for "forgery." The word was apparently an invention of el Diablo Americano. So he said, with a slight smile in his kindly eye:

"Anybody wicked enough—and dexterous enough can imitate another's handwriting. When this is used to benefit fraud we call it 'forgery.' I beg your pardon—Miss De Haro, Miss Carmen—what is the matter?"

She had suddenly lapsed against a tree, pale, helpless, nerveless, and with staring eyes fixed on his. As yet an embryo woman, inexperienced and ignorant, the sex instinct was potential, she had in one plunge fathomed all that his reason had been years groping for.

Thatcher saw only that she was passed that she was helpless, that was enough. "It is possible that your uncle may have been deceived," he began, "many honest men have been fooled by clever but dishonest men and women."

"Stop! Maître de Dieu! Wait—wait—stop!"

Thatcher began instant penance from the flashing eyes and white face of the little figure that had, with menacing and clenched baby fingers, strode to his side. He stopped. "Where is this application—this forgery?" she asked. "Show it to me!"

Thatcher felt relieved and smiled the superior smile of our sex over feminine ignorance. "You could hardly expect me to be trusted with your uncle's vouchers. He is prepared to [illegible] counsel."

"And which can I leave this place?" she asked passionately.

"We call it forgery."

"If you consult my wishes you will stay, if only long enough to forgive me. But if I have offended you unknowingly, and you are implacable——

"I can go to-morrow at sunrise if I like."

"As you will," returned Thatcher gravely.

"Gracias, Señor."

They walked slowly back to the house, Thatcher with a masculine sense of being unreasonably afflicted, Carmen with a woman's instinct of being hopelessly crushed. No word was spoken until they reached the door. Then Carmen suddenly, in her old, impulsive way, and in a child's sweetness, [illegible] merrily: "Good night, O Don Royal, and pleasant dreams! Hasta mañana."

Thatcher stood dumb and astounded at this capricious girl. She saw his mystification instantly. "It is for the old cat!" she whispered, jerking her thumb over her shoulder in the direction of the sleeping Mrs. P. "Good night—go!"

He went to give orders for a peon to attend the ladies and their equipage the next day. He awoke to find Miss De Haro gone, with her escort, towards Monterey. And without the Plodgitt.

He could not conceal his surprise from the latter lady. She, left alone—a not altogether unavailable victim to the wiles of our sex—was embarrassed. But not so much that she could not say to Thatcher: "I told you so—gone to her uncle. * * To tell him all!"

"All. D—n it, what can she tell him?" roared Thatcher, stung out of his self-control.

"Nothing, I hope, but she should not," said Mrs. P., and chastely retired.

She was right. Miss Carmen posted to Monterey, running her horse nearly off its legs to do it, and then sent back her beast and escort, saying she would rejoin Mrs. Plodgitt by steamer at San Francisco. Then she went boldly to the law office of Saponaceous Wood, district attorney and whilom solicitor of her uncle.

With the majority of masculine Monterey Miss Carmen was known and respectfully admired, despite the inadvisable reputation of her kinsman. Mr. Wood was glad to see her, and awkwardly gallant. Miss Carmen was cool and businesslike, she had come from her uncle to represent the papers in the Red Rock Rancho case. They were instantly produced. Carmen turned to the application for the grant. Her cheek paled slightly. With her [illegible] she said not to be mistaken. The signature of Micheltorena was in her own handwriting.

Yet she looked up to the lawyer with a smile. "May I take these papers for 48 hours to my uncle?"

Even as a lawyer and a Yankee then the district attorney could not [illegible] dropping his jaw and that [illegible]

"Certainly."

"I will return them in an hour."

She was as good as her word, and within the hour dropped the papers and a little impetuous note to her uncle's legal advocate, and that night took the steamer to San Francisco.

The next morning Victor Garcia, a little the worse for the previous night's dissipation, reeled into Wood's office. "I have come for my niece Carmen. She is with the enemy," he said thickly. "Look you at this."

It was an anonymous letter to Mrs. Plodgitt, in a shaky, kitten-like scrawl, but still in the writer's own awkward fist, advising him of the fact that his niece was bought by the enemy, and cautioning him against her.

"Impossible," said the lawyer, "it was only last week he sent them $50."

Victor blushed, even through his ensanguined cheeks, and made an impatient gesture with his hand.

"Besides," added the lawyer coolly, "she has been here to examine the papers at my request, and returned them of yesterday."

Victor gasped—"And you—you—you—gave them to her?"

"Of course!"

"All? Even the application and the signature?"

"Certainly—you sent her."

"Sent her! The devil's own daughter!" shrieked Garcia. "No! a hundred million times, no! Quick, before it is too late! Give me the papers."

Mr. Wood reproached the idea. Garcia ran over it with trembling fingers until at last he clutched the fateful document. Not content with opening it and glancing at its text and signature, he took it to the window.

"It is the same," he muttered with a sigh of relief.

"Of course it is," said Mr. Wood sharply. "The papers are all there. You're a fool, Victor Garcia!"

And so he was. And, for the matter of that, so was Mr. Saponaceous Wood, counsel.

Meanwhile Miss De Haro returned to San Francisco and resumed her work. A day or two later she was joined by her landlady. Mrs. P. has too large a nature to permit an anonymous letter, written by her own hand, to stand between her and her demeanor to her little lodger. So she coddled her and flattered her, and depicted in slightly exaggerated colors the grief of Don Royal at her sudden departure. All of which Miss Carmen received in a demure, kitten-like way, but still kept quiet at her work. In due time Don Royal's order was completed, still she had courage and confirmation enough to add certain touches to the ghastly sketch of the crumbling furnace.

Nevertheless, as Don Royal did not return, through excess of business, Mrs. Plodgitt turned an honest penny by letting his room, for a beastly habit of cigarette-smoking which tainted the whole house, were fair enough [illegible]. If they failed in making the acquaintance of their fair countrywoman. Miss De Haro [illegible] her own work, and not through their agentings, endeavors.

Miss De Haro is peculiar, reasoned the point Mrs. Plodgitt to her guests; she makes no acquaintances, which I consider bad for her business. If it had not been for me, she would have [illegible] for a partner in his mine."

The two foreign gentlemen exchanged glances. One said: "Ah, I see!" the other said: "It is not possible!" and then, when the little black sack was finally introduced themselves with a skeleton key into the country woman, who was absent sketching.

"Thou dost see," said Mr. Pedro, refugee, to Miguel, "she is certain, that this Americano is all powerful, and that this Victor is indeed no lie. It is right, his suspicions."

"Of a verity, yes," replied Miguel, "thou dost remember it was Jovita Castro who, for her Americano lover, betrayed the Sobriente's claim. It is only with us, my Pedro, that the Mexican spirit, the red God and liberty, yet lives."

They shook hands nobly and with sentimental fervor, and then went to work, i. e., the rummaging over the trunks, drawers and porte-manteaus of the poor little painter, Carmen De Haro, and even ripped up the mattress of her virginal cot. But they found not what they sought.

"What is that yonder on the easel, covered with a cloth?" said Miguel; "it is a trick of these artists to put their valuables together."

Pedro stole to the easel and tore away the muslin curtain that veiled it; then uttered a shriek that appalled his comrade and brought him to his side.

"In the name of God!" said Miguel, hastily, "are you trying to alarm the house?"

The ex-vaquero was trembling like a child. "Look! look! look! look, do you see? It is the hand of God!" and fainted on the floor.

Miguel looked. It was Carmen's partly finished sketch of the deserted furnace. The figure of Concho, thrown out strongly by the camp fire, occupied the left foreground. But to balance her picture she had evidently been obliged to introduce another—the face and figure of Pedro, on all fours, creeping toward the sleeping man.

PART III.

IN CONGRESS.

CHAPTER X.

WHO LOBBIED FOR IT.

CASWELLER.

It was a midsummer's day in Washington. Even at early morning, while the sun was yet level with the faces of pedestrian in its broad, shadeless avenues, it was insufferably hot. Later the avenues themselves shone like the diverging rays of another sun—the Capitol—a thing to be feared by the naked eye. Later yet it grew hotter, and then a mist arose from the Potomac and blotted out the brazing arch above, and presently peal upon peal along the horizon detusive thunder clouds, that spent their strength and substance elsewhere, and left it hotter than before. Toward evening the sun came out invigorated, having cleared the heavens from a blow of perspiration, but leaving its fever unabated.

The city was deserted. The few who remained apparently buried themselves from the garish light of day in some dim, cloistered recess of shop, hotel or restaurant, and the returning stranger, dazed by the outer glare, who broke in upon their quiet, sequestered repose, confronted collarless and coatless specters of the past, with fans in their hands, who, after dreamily going through some perfunctory business, immediately retired to sleep after the stranger had gone. Congressmen and senators had long since returned to their several constituencies, with the various information that the country was going to ruin, or that the outlook never was more hopeful and cheering, as the tastes of their constituency indicated. A few cabinet officers still lingered, having by this time become convinced that they could do nothing their own way, or indeed many way but the old way, and getting gloomily resigned to their situation. A body of learned, cultivated men, representing the highest legal tribunal in the land, still lingered in a vague idea of earning the scant salary bestowed upon them by the economical founders of the government, and listened patiently to the arguments of counsel, whose fees for advocacy of claims before them would have paid the life income of half the bench. There was Mr. Attorney General and his assistants still protecting the government's millions from rapacious hands, and drawing the yearly public pittance that their wealthier private antagonists would have scarce given as a retainer to their junior counsel. The little standing army of departmental employes, the helpless victims of the most senseless and stupid form of discipline the world has known—a discipline so made up of caprice, expediency, cowardice and tyranny that its reform meant revolution, not to be tolerated by legislators and lawgivers, or a despotism in which half a dozen accidentally-chosen men interpreted their prejudices or preferences as being that reform. Administration after administration and party after party had persisted in their desperate attempts to fit the youthful colonial garments, made by our fathers after a by-gone fashion, over the expanded limbs and generous outline of a matured nation. There were patches here and there; there were gaping rents and holes here and there; there were lurid rents and painful exposures of growing limbs everywhere, and the party in power and the party out of power could do nothing but mend and patch and bedaub and bedraggle and [illegible], and occasionally in the witchery of hope suggest even the cutting off the redundant limbs that persisted in growing beyond the swaddling clothes of its infancy.

It was a capital of contradictions and inconsistencies. At one end of the avenue sat the responsible keeper of the military honor, valor and warlike prestige of a great nation, without the power to pay his own [illegible] dues until some selfish quarrel between party and party was settled. Hard by sat another secretary, whose established functions seemed to be the misrepresentation of the nation abroad by the best class of its classes, the politicians, and only then when they had been defeated as politicians, and when their constituents had declared them no longer worthy to be even their representatives. The national absurdity was only equaled by another, whereon an ex-politician sat for four years expected to [illegible] the [illegible] of a [illegible] the sentiments of each in [illegible] before he was removed by [illegible] expired, [illegible] the [illegible] from a superior office as a reward of this special drive as himself, and so go to the revision of congress organized from early [illegible] the avenue was another department [illegible] its extent and so varied in its functions that few of the [illegible] great practical wisdom of the nation [illegible] for ten times its salary. But which the most perfect constitution in the world handed over to men who were obliged to make it a stepping stone to future preferment. There was another department more suggestive of its financial functions from the occasional extravagances or economies exhibited in its payrolls—successive congresses having taken other matters out of its hands—presided over by an official who bore the title and responsibility of the custodian and disburser of the nation's purse, and received a salary that a bank president would have sniffed at. For it was part of this constitutional inconsistency and administrative absurdity that in the matter of honor, justice, fidelity to trust and even business integrity, the official was always expected to be the superior of the government he represented. Yet the crowning inconsistency was that, from time to time, it was submitted to the sovereign people to declare if these various inconsistencies were not really the perfect expression of the most perfect government the world had known. And it is to be recorded that the unanimous voice of representative, orator and unfettered poetry were that it was.

HINTS ON TAXATION

Paper Read Before the Farmers Social Club by Mr. F. V. Horton

MR. P[illegible] — I [illegible] to the Club by way of introducing the subject for their deliberation. In the first place it is [illegible] that the farmer whose property is [illegible] upon by the inspectors of the assessor, should be assessed for [illegible] portion of his property [illegible] a third more than [illegible] of the property [illegible] and more [illegible] of the property [illegible] the state pay but a small per cent of the taxes toward the support of the government, which they really ought to pay. Now, Mr. President, is there any [illegible] bring capital to [illegible] such as lands, [illegible] the greater portion. Notes and mortgages are [illegible] to the lender certain and sure income year in year out, while the farmers income is by no means certain and sure. Money [illegible] the lender from six to ten per cent [illegible] and [illegible] labor [illegible] which there are but very few [illegible] of the farmer [illegible] to pay [illegible] of over 4 [illegible] and even [illegible] bring [illegible] all the [illegible] of the farmer [illegible] Money [illegible] have to sit at night and [illegible] the money [illegible] in a business [illegible] making his money [illegible] and [illegible] the farmer [illegible] the money [illegible] made to bear [illegible] portion [illegible] the support of government. But how is it to be done? Certainly I think not under the present law for that only contemplates the [illegible] under oath [illegible] to put a person under oath [illegible] amount of his property to assess. [illegible] is entirely [illegible] with the supervisors [illegible] does that or not.

It appears to be that this [illegible] is very loose indeed and gives a wide chance for both fraud and error, fraud of shielding and getting the [illegible] of some rich money lender, and error by letting off some known to be rich with a very light assessment. Now my idea is that the law should be so amended as not only to authorize the supervisors to take the assessment under oath, but to compel them to do so under a penalty for non performance of duty. I believe that if every person was obliged to give in his assessment under oath, our assessment rolls would very nearly approximate a true valuation of the property of the state, personal as well as real, for there are very few men, indeed, that would perjure themselves to save taxation and run the risk of the criminal law made and provided for such crimes. Now such a law would work no injury to the honest man who is disposed to act fairly with the supervisors, and the man who is not so disposed [illegible] ought to [illegible]

As to the [illegible] which [illegible] I think [illegible] present law of the [illegible] on [illegible] Book Stocks, the stock [illegible] The amount of [illegible] was [illegible] the Board of [illegible] was [illegible] who [illegible] the [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Andrew Johnson's Beginning

When Andrew Johnson ended Green's tailor he hardly knew what to do. He went to a tailor shop and asked for work, having some skill in the trade, but the tailor needed no assistance and Johnson turned his attention elsewhere. He was not a boy with much assurance and was in fact rather bashful, so he roamed around a great deal before he found something to turn up. At last he came back past on the friendless boy and saw him standing opposite his shop one day with a look of discouragement on his face. He went to him and asked him to come over to the shop and he would try to help him. Johnson quickly accepted the offer and went to work.

Opposite the shop where Johnson worked lived an Irish woman with three daughters. The woman was a shoemaker, having learned the trade from her husband and continued to work after his death in order to support and educate her three children. Johnson became acquainted with the family and married one of the girls, who, though possessing little if any learning, was thoroughly capable of instructing her husband, which she did, teaching him to read, write and cipher. While giving her husband instruction she would sit opposite him at his trade.—Boston Transcript.

The Gypsies' Costume

Their usual attire is that of the third clothes man. There is return, indeed, to distinguish them by their dress, which is made up of any kind of material, old and that may have come to the possession. The women and girls wear a linen calico or heavy poplin dress, adorn themselves with a bright colored ribbon or two, change the location and have their head enveloped in a bandana. In some rich communities of the United States, gypsies, by their dress and style of the day. These people in various parts of Europe, particularly in the costumes of the country in which they live, there is no poetry, no romance, no picturesque, little apparel of the Arcadian gypsy.

The gypsy of the stage is usually dressed in the costume of Spanish peasantry, and the Italian gypsy is a peasant of Italy.

Of failing health, whether in the form of Night Sweats and Nervousness, or in a sense of General Weariness and Loss of Appetite, should suggest the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This preparation is most effective for giving tone and strength to the enfeebled system, promoting the digestion and assimilation of food, restoring the nervous forces to their normal condition, and purifying, vitalizing, and enriching the blood.

Failing Health.

I have found Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my practice, to be a valuable alterative, and must say that I honestly believe it to be the best blood medicine ever compounded.—W. F. Fowler, M. D., D. D. S., Greenville, Tenn.

Dyspepsia Cured.

It would be impossible for me to describe what I suffered from Indigestion and Headache up to the time I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was under the care of various physicians, and tried a great many kinds of medicines, but never obtained more than temporary relief. After taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for a short time, my headache disappeared, and my stomach performed its duties more perfectly. To-day my health is completely restored.—Mary Hayes, Springfield, Mass.

OUR LANSING LETTER.

Robert Burns, who was sometimes excriseman and sometimes poet, in his "Epistle to a Young Friend" discoursed after the subjoin'd fashion:

> When wi' a bosom crony,
> But still keep something to yourself,
> Ye scarcely tell to ony,

Upon this good counsel I propose to act. While it is my purpose to the series of letters of which this is the [illegible] paper as fully informed as possible regarding such matters as seem to me may be of interest to them during the present session of the legislature, I shall endeavor to avoid furnishing dry [illegible] fulgatory tales or uncharitable reflections. With reasonably fair opportunities for acquiring information, I hope to be able to make every letter interesting to all classes of readers, and at the same time I shall endeavor to render them so entertaining that the reception and perusal of each succeeding letter may be an occasion as joyous as one of Col. Stockbridge's recherche wine suppers.

Here, as elsewhere throughout the state, the senatorial question dwarfs all others. Every candidate seems to be doing his utmost to secure the much coveted prize. J. J. Woodman, ex master of the State Grange, received something of a boom during the late meeting of that body at the Capital City, but politicians do not give themselves much concern about him. His name has been brought forward more or less prominently in connection with the office at every senatorial election for the past decade, but he happens never confident to excite any particular disturbance of the political atmosphere. The recent withdrawal of Gen. Cutcheon has not had a tendency to decide the contest. His supporters it is thought will divide so as to give none of the other candidates a decisive contingent. The retirement of Mr. McMillan from the contest is not considered as irrevocable as the laws of the Medes and Persians, and it is set down among the possibilities that he may, in the interest of harmony, perhaps, be prevented upon to patch up early stepped into the breach. His withdrawal is supposed to have somewhat augmented the congressman A. Hublet, whose prospects were erstwhile of a decidedly dark horse nature. Ex-Congressman Ferry has been cutting a pretty wide swath in the senatorial mead, and his supporters are pushing his claims to the place with unabated earnestness. It was thought a month ago, that Senator Conger's reelection was simply an impossibility, and his candidacy was decried on all sides. There are, however, very strong surface indications that "there is life in the old dog yet." Like Banquo's ghost he will not down, and I hay some [illegible] who profess the power in casting a [illegible] political horoscope, who are willing to wager their mortgage nickle that the "great objector" from the Sylvan City will be able, when the proper time comes, to put in his thumb and pull out the senatorial plum. It has become apparent, with the developments of the last few days, that Grand Rapids proposes to stand right by Mr. Fitzgerald. He has been some of more than ordinary vigor, and with proper irrigation and cultivation may fructify generously. The mention of the name of Henry A. Robinson, of Detroit, as a labor candidate, has brought a derisive smile to many a countenance. I must confess the idea of a Knight of Labor in the U. S. senate is somewhat ludicrous. The dawn of the millennium is not yet visible. Since Mr. McMillan's withdrawal the friends of Col. Stockbridge have claimed for him a following that insures his election. His boom is in the hands of Sherman S. Olds and Wm. Van Buren, of this city, both indefatigable workers, and they are leaving no stone unturned under which may be concealed a doubtful or susceptible member of the legislature. That the colonel is in the van is evidenced by the fact that it has been Stockbridge against the field for some time. It is this very fact that renders his success somewhat dubious and makes speculation a soul-harrowing and altogether useless employment.

It is therefore impossible to predict at this writing, with any degree of accuracy, what will be the outcome of this especially fervent and energetic contest. With the transfer of the scene of conflict to Lansing the public eye can be more perfectly focused on the contending leaders and the movements of their cohorts. Just now the foglemen are busily bestiring themselves about the several headquarters and every action gives evidence of an unprecedentedly sharp fight, exceeding in torridity even the long to be remembered contest in which ex-Senator Ferry was relegated to the sylvan shades of private life. It is contended by some that whatever agreement is reached in caucus will be adhered to by nearly all the Republican members. Others, supposed to be endowed with unusually keen and penetrating political perception, do not believe that anything will be effected in caucus, but that the contentions of the several factions will result in an embittered conflict, long drawn out. Reasonable deductions force the conclusion that it will be at least impossible to elect a senator at the time when such selection should be made. I suppose the people of Michigan hope the best man may win. But in point of fact, the best man seldom does win. That man generally succeeds whose methods are the most effective, regardless of more important considerations. We can better tell who that man is

TEMPERANCE COLUMN.

The National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

The Nation Woman's Christian Temperance Union has now been organized nearly twelve years. Its work is non sectional, non sectarian, and comprised under the general divisions of Preventive, Educational, Evangelistic, Social and Legal work.

[illegible] tion. Its auxiliaries have been one of the chief factors in all State campaigns for local option, statutory prohibition and constitutional amendments. It began the improvement for [illegible] Temperance Education in the public schools, having been instrumental in securing laws to that effect in all of the states, besides the only temperance legislation ever won from Congress, by which all the Territories and the District of Columbia are brought under the same beneficent statutes, and nearly one half the children of America who are of school age are to be regularly taught the effects of alcoholics and other narcotics upon the human system. It has united Northern and Southern women in a common work for God and home and native land, and its efforts have tended to sweep away the alienation of years and replace it by sisterly affection. It has founded a publishing house and a temperance paper, the Union Signal, which are to day exercising wide influence. Over thirty million pages were printed by the Woman's Temperance Publication Association this year.

The National Bureau of Heredity and Hygiene, which [illegible] at the very root of the [illegible] sion, are of great practical usefulness in the homes of the people. Its work among children in the Sunday Schools, Bands of Hope, and Kindergarten, efforts to influence college students and to train and organize young women for a philanthropic life [illegible] gelistic work for the non thinking class, for railway employes, soldiers, sailors, lumbermen, prisoners, especially for the drinking men of all classes, all these have proved the breadth of its comprehension and the tireless zeal. Its efforts to reach the drunkard and the [illegible] to establish reformatories and homes for the wretched victims of the bottle and their suffering children and its temperance Flower Mission appeal to every true heart.

It has sought to purify the holidays of the people, rending with its ceaseless influence the fairs, celebrations, entertainments, and expositions, and by its unrequited toil, providing refreshments, keeping alcoholic poisons off the grounds, and circulating pure water and pure literature. It has battled for the maintenance of the American Sabbath, sought to introduce the pure juice of the grape at sacramental tables, and to secure a day of prayer for temperance in the Week of Prayer.

It has circulated countless petitions and addressed Synods and Conferences, Teachers' Associations, and Medical Societies, as well as the legislatures, State and national, always for one object and with one plea. "We beseech you to refrain from the use of alcoholics and to outlaw the liquor traffic." In recent years it has bravely championed the cause of social purity and the White Cross movement, which seeks to instruct the young manhood of the nation, to uplift it and preserve it from the ways that take hold upon death, to redeem outcast women from a slavery worse than that of chains, and by better laws to secure protection to women and girls from the outrages of brutal men.

It has sent forth its call to all civilized lands for a union of womanhood against the brain poisons which are the greatest foe of home, and a World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union is the result, which has its organizers in Japan, Scandinavia and Germany, has already enlisted Australia and the Sandwich Islands, and has at its head Mrs. Margaret Lucas, the sister of John Bright.

It is a fact not readily believed that for the first eight years of its work the income of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union averaged but $1,000 a year. During all that time it had not a single salaried officer, and now has but one, its Corresponding Secretary, at $1,000 per year, while a private secretary is furnished the President at $600.

The present income is from $[illegible] to $[illegible] per year, but this is so far from meeting current needs that it is with difficulty the society keeps out of debt—indeed, it has not always done so, but during most of the period since the crusade has had arrearages that were a source of continual anxiety to its leaders.

Meanwhile almost no donations or bequests have been received, save from five or six persons who have given from $500 to $1,000 per year for a few of the later years, and one who has for several years given $1,000 annually. It seems impossible that philanthropic people, knowing the record of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union and how little money it possesses, can read this record with indifference.

Ann Taylor of Devil's Lake, visited at Elmer Wheaton's, Newburg, last week.

An Adrian Paper says that Newburg has raised a girl weight 1 to Clinton Woman Milling. We believe such is [illegible], except she does not want the smoke and dirt which such an institution would necessarily bring.

We meant to say last week that Bert Chandler, just good of Will, went to Chicago, but of [illegible] that he had been to the paper please excuse us this.

Mr. and Mrs. G. D. Miller of Holloway, [illegible] from Ypsilanti last Sunday F. M. Bell and family were guests of the same [illegible] Mr. Bell taught the [illegible] at Newburg. [illegible] We fairly regret [illegible] but he seems to differ [illegible] of that time than the C. T. [illegible] now.

The members of the East Raisin [illegible] watched the old year [illegible] in a very pleasant and satisfactory manner. Chartering two bobsleighs of the small dimensions, with all the essentials to comfort, such as hot foot bricks, robes, etc., the party proceeded to the city of the muses. After viewing the many points of interest connected with that historic city, they resumed to the city open house and witnessed that now and thrilling dramatic specimen entitled "Uncle Tom's Cabin," after which they directed their steps toward the table of more for refreshment. After speeches, toasts, etc., they departed for home arriving there just as the clock was tolling the death of the old year. Several of the C. T. operatives were participators and report a very fine time.

H. H. Holbrook and wife received a pleasant surprise at the hands of their friends and neighbors last Saturday evening, the occasion being the [illegible] anniversary of their wedded life. A large party of friends from Adrian were present and a general good time enjoyed. The members of the C. T. unite in congratulations and the hope they may be spared to enjoy many happy returns.

OBITUARY.

Died at her home at Rushville, Sheridan Co., Nebraska, on the 24th of Dec. 1886, J. Anna Burger aged 30 yrs and 7 months, wife of Charles Burger, formerly of Tecumseh, and daughter of Michael and C. Martine Wilson, of Franklin township.

The deceased came to her death by her own hand, but there is unmistakeable evidence that it was an act of insanity. Since the birth of her babe, five months since, she has from time to time showed signs of her reason being dethroned, and it was undoubtedly due to derangement of internal organs. Her letters to her parents showed that she still held to her Christian life, that her home was happy, and that she enjoyed her frontier life. The morning of the occurrence of the sad event, her husband went away early for a load of wood and upon his return, found his wife and three little children, aged respectively 4 yrs, 2 yrs, and 5 months old, cold in death. The family have the sympathy of the community in their deep affliction.

AMOS JAMES.

How He Subdued His Greatest Enemy.

Port Huron, Mich., Dec. 6, 1886.

I have been suffering from Kidney troubles for a number of years, at times the pain in the small of my back and about my hips was almost unbearable, preventing me from being able to sleep. I also had the rheumatism. After using two bottles of Hubbard's Rheumatic Syrup, to my great satisfaction, I found that it was curing me and I now believe that I am a well man. I most cheerfully recommend it to all who may be suffering from kidney diseases or rheumatism. I know it is a great family medicine and keep it in the house all the time.

AMOS JAMES.

There was quite an influx of Republican politicians in town Tuesday.

An ounce of discretion is better than a pound of knowledge. Why not spend twenty five cents for a bottle of Red Star Cough Cure, and save a large doctor's bill?

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent

[illegible] Dec. 6th, 1887.

The city has been more quiet during the holidays. Quite a number of Senators and Representatives went home to eat their Christmas dinner. The death of Senator Logan caused various proposed festivities to be abandoned, and the mourning has again kept the President indoors, so that he has been compelled to forego certain social entertainments given in his honor.

Today almost everybody in prominence in Washington attended the imposing funeral ceremonies of the distinguished dead, which were held in the Senate chamber. General Logan and his wife were members of the Methodist church and Rev. Dr. Newman the Washington pastor of Gen. Grant, officiated at the funeral, assisted by the chaplain of the senate and the Rev. Dr. Butler of the Lutheran church. The funeral procession from the Capitol to the cemetery, which was lengthened by a number of civic and military organizations, was in charge of Gen. Sheridan.

This was the sixth funeral that has taken place in the Senate Chamber. The first was that of Senator Hicks of Maryland, the next Senator Foote of Vermont, then Hon. Charles Sumner, Vice President Wilson, and last March Senator Miller from California.

Among all the tributes that are paid to the deceased Senator, the honesty of his legislative life was lost sight of. In an era when corruption was rife, and when many of the strongest men of both parties were broken down and blasted by public exposure or denunciation, which was admitted as fatal, Logan escaped all those long years untouched even by suspicion. Although his political friends accused him of being narrow in his prejudices sometimes, even they acknowledge that he was a firm, sincere friend who never stooped to hypocrisy.

The nomination of Mr. Matthews, the colored lawyer from Albany, to be Recorder of Deeds in the District of Columbia, promises to become a celebrated case. The President holds that since the Senate rejected him last summer much of the opposition to Matthews' appointment has been removed by the latter's appointment of the office. The Democrats are in dignant that the President should have again sent it to send in the name of this carpetbagger from Albany as they call him, and the Republicans are watching with interest to see how the Senate will treat the case of the same nominee which it rejected last session.

In nominating Mr. Matthews the President said to the Senate: "I have ventured in view of the demonstrated fitness of this nominee, and with the understanding that the objections heretofore urged against his selection have to a great extent subsided, and confessing a desire to render to our colored fellow citizens just recognition and the utmost good faith, to again submit this nomination to the Senate for confirmation, at the same time disclaiming any intent to question its previous action in the premises." The matter will cause a warm discussion soon, and it is probably that Mr. Matthews will be rejected again.

Congress did a good deal of work in the brief time it convened before the holidays, and it should not be severely censured if it were to do nothing more this session except to pass the regular appropriation bill. Still much more is projected. For instance, Representative Springer says he will do all he can to pass his bill enabling the Territories of Dakota, Montana, New Mexico and Washington to enter the Union as states, and he thinks he may succeed.

There are two propositions pending before Congress now relative to the subject of marriage and divorce and whether or not any action will be taken on either of them, the question involved is one of great public importance and constantly increasing interest. One of these measures proposes a Constitutional amendment for the establishment of uniform laws throughout the United States regulating marriage and divorce.

The White House patriot has been refractory and consequently he is not so well as he otherwise might have been. The President's physician warned him to keep still and not expose himself to drafts, and both of these orders were disobeyed. Then on Wednesday afternoon the President drove out to his country place in an open Victoria, wearing a light overcoat and caught some cold.

The president's trouble is a rheumatic knee and everything is being done to prevent the disease from spreading, but, said the Doctor, no medical skill has ever been able to confine rheumatism to one part of the body. In the case of Gen. Logan it was the specious aim of the physicians to keep it from the heart. While they succeeded in doing this, it attacked the brain. The president hopes, however, to be equal to the ordeal of the usual New Years day reception at the White House. Even if he cannot endure the entire two hours' task, he proposes to receive until compelled by fatigue to retire.

Dr. J. Simonald, New Orleans La., says: "Scott's Emulsion is the finest preparation of the kind ever brought to my notice. In affections of the lungs and other wasting diseases, we may consider it our most reliable agent. In a perfectly elegant and agreeable form."

The latest sensation was the arrest of Chas. A. Pocklington, last Friday night. As he was on his way to Britton, Friday, he found a bag of feed near Wm. Ransom's in the road, and picked it up supposing it belonging to a man that was ahead of him with a load, but on overtaking him, learned he had not lost it. When he got to Britton, he left it at Mr. McClure & Co's store for whoever it might rightfully belong to, when to his surprise that evening he was arrested by Mr. Ransom for stealing it. He claims of having left it in the road while he carried one bag to the house. After an examination before Justice W. H. Arner, Mr. Pocklington gave bail to appear next Friday at 10 o'clock A. M. for trial. The coincidence is creating considerable amusement.

B. F. DePuy is a little off over a heavy cold, from wallowing around in the snow getting out logs for his new barn.

An exciting runaway occurred last Thursday afternoon. Mary Osgood went to the post-office with a horse and cutter after the mail and it being about time for school to close, drove to the school house for the teacher, Miss Susie Osgood, who was to be her guest that evening. She tied the horse and went into the school-room. On coming out she led the horse to the steps, but turning in the deep snow, tipped the cutter over on the side; and while stepping back to right it up, the horse started for home, and was soon under break neck speed. After crossing the Macon bridge, instead of going up the hill toward home the horse turned up the west road, just missing M. Yates and wife who were in a cutter going the same way. Mr. Y. had got out and in leading his horse out of the way upset his own cutter, dumping his wife out into the snow, who was so shook up as to be quite unwell all that night. The runaway horse ascended the Beardsley hill, turning into the yard around the house and into the back kitchen door and but for the cutter being larger than the door would have gone right into the sitting room where the family were sitting. The horse was slightly bruised on the forlock from coming in contact with the cutter, otherwise no serious damage except a demolished cutter.

We frequently see Mr. Wm. Hayden's teams from Tecumseh going by with loads of flour and feed for Michigan. The distance by wagon road is about 20 miles, while by railroad it is about 10 miles. The spectacle of a 20 mile wagon road competing in freight with a 10 mile railroad. Two years ago when the new boiler in the tile works was shipped from Detroit to Ridgeway, the freight charges were $20, and the old boiler was put onto the same car and shipped back, making $40 for the round trip. A good team and man would have taken the old boiler to Detroit and returned with the new, which with the fixtures weighs only 500 lbs. in three days at $3 per day. Would be $9. As $9 is to $40, so is a wagon road to a rail road. Oh no! the tariff on way freight don't need regulating.

Grandma Brigton was there among the rest of the young people. The cornet band also rendered some of their best pieces.

Elder James Wright, pastor of the Christian Church, received a very pleasant surprise last week Friday, from the members of that church about fifty in number, carrying with them roast turkey, chicken-pie and many other eatables too numerous to mention. After dinner had been served, all were invited into the parlor and the ladies presented Mrs. Wright with a purse. But the greatest surprise to them was a brother of Mrs. Wright's, living at Flint, that she had not seen for 16 years, who went in with the rest.

Inter-State Agricultural Convention at Lake Charles.

Governor McEnery, of Louisiana, has issued a call for an inter-state convention in the interest of stock-raising, dairying, fruit-growing, and general agriculture, to be held at Lake Charles, La., on the 22d, 23d and 24th of February, 1887.

The convention will be formally opened on Wednesday morning, after the close of Mardi Gras.

One of the most noteworthy indications of the great industrial progress of the Gulf States is the marked attention of their public men to agriculture and the efforts they are making to bring the theory and the methods of agriculture in those States into harmony with teachings of science and the highest demands of a progressive civilization. Nature has been prodigal of her gifts to the State of Louisiana. For fertility of soil, salubrious climate, and for great variety of products, Louisiana ranks among the most favored countries of the globe.

Governor McEnery has shown commendable wisdom in thus giving the weight of his official influence to call a convention which cannot fail to be of inestimable value to the farm interest of that State and the country generally. We trust it may be widely noticed by the press, and that the results may be all the people anticipate.

This convention is so called that excursionists can remain in New Orleans till the close of Mardi Gras and take the train for Lake Charles on Tuesday evening.

Full information in regard to the convention and the low rates of transportation, can be obtained by addressing the Secretary,

CERTAINLY THE BEST.

Papillon Clark's extract of Red Catarrh Cure, from an experiment, has grown to be the acknowledged superior of any remedy for similar purposes. Purely vegetable and scientifically prepared, it is absolutely harmless, and effects cures where all other known remedies and the most learned medical talent fail. That it is a favorite with all classes is evidenced by the fact that during the past two years, 86,000 gallons have been sold. Positively cures Catarrh, Hay Fever, Colds, etc. Large bottles $1.00.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSONS.

CAIN AND ABEL. Gen. 4.

NOTES.—IN PROCESS OF TIME. An indefinite period after the events just given. It was doubtless at a time fit for a thanksgiving. "AN OFFERING." A present, a thank-offering not used here in any ceremonial sense. Both offerings were instruction, evidence how Abel made a special selection of the best and the choicest, the very firstlings of the flock, while Cain simply brought part of the fruit, with no careful selection implied in the context. The first shows a reverential painstaking, the second, only the outward fulfillment of a moral obligation. "HIS COUNTENANCE FELL."—His head hung down in moody, sullen dissatisfaction with Abel and God. The consciousness of guilt oppressed him. But God still reasons with Cain, hoping to win him back. He is not yet altogether hardened or without hope. "SHALT THOU NOT BE ACCEPTED?"—Literally IS THERE NOT LIFTING UP, either of the guilt, or of the sacrifice by fire, or of the countenance, so as to look cheerfully into God's face. "THOU SHALT RULE OVER HIM."—That is, if thou doest well and overcomest this temptation. "AND SLEW HIM."—Murder entirely unpremeditated, of course, as it was the first. It was during some conversation that his anger and jealousy entirely overcame him. Perhaps Abel's flocks had trespassed on his fields. Perhaps the thought of rejected sacrifices sting him. Before he knew it, he stood aghast before the first human corpse. "I KNEW NOT." Ignorant that God knoweth all things, Cain tries to cover up his sin, first with a lie, then with an unnatural disregard of all brotherly ties. One sin immediately begets another. The first was wicked, the second cowardly and mean. "THY BROTHER'S BLOOD CRIETH UNTO ME." Abel, miserably failed in his attempt. Cain dead was more up-to-date than before for his murder cried out to God for vengeance. The voice of blood is as an immediate conscription of sin, and is irreversible. The curse of guilty ground shall yield no fruit and still suspicion will compel a wandering life. The crops were not withheld by miracle or interposition, but blighted by his crime, he cannot endure for long the peaceful, quiet life of farming. He can not wait till the earth brings forth its increase. Plant here or not he is doomed to be a fugitive and a vagabond. He must flee from before God and man. Sin is a natural separator. In vv. 13, 14, Cain is overcome less by repentance than by the severity of his punishment. The sentence is fourfold. 1. Banishment from fertile lands. 2. From God's face. 3. A fugitive's life. 4. An exposed life. The fear of the last takes the strongest hold of him. "VENGEANCE SEVENFOLD."—Why not death for Cain? Because the first murder was not premeditated. On the other hand any one killing Cain would do it deliberately, and so deserve complete vengeance. "A SIGN." Speculation as to what the nature of this was is vain. It was simply to protect Cain from a murderer's death. "NOD," means OF WANDERING and OF MISERY. Little is known of Nod as of Eden.

INSTRUCTION. The lesson of to-day tells the story of the first family quarrel and its awful results.

Notice first that both were religiously brought up, and worshiped God by offerings. Their parents must have given them instruction out of their own experiences. That is every parent's duty first to teach children the best they know, and instruction must be given prayerfully as if all depended upon it.

The quarrel came from JEALOUSY. Pretty bad that, too much of it now in our families. Cain was jealous of God's preference for Abel. It was his own fault, but of course he blamed somebody else, and had to deal his spite and hatred on his brother. But he may have taken your offence, Cain, and improved yourself when you could, than to wander around hungry and hated the first tramp known of, seeking to stifle a troubled conscience. "AM I MY BROTHER'S KEEPER?" Of course, you are. The world ever eager to escape responsibility by plausible replies, "No, I am not." But Christ says, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one." Plain enough, isn't it? Why quibble any more? There is Will across the street. I said something real naughty before him yesterday, and I heard him repeat it this morning. Never thought of the harm I was doing. Guess I had better take care in the future. Why, I believe that I am responsible for everything I say or do in his presence. I might lead him astray, and God might reprove and punish me for it. I cannot stand that. I can't even stand the burden of my own sins. I'll be very careful in the future.

OUR LANSING LETTER.

LANSING, JAN. 11, 1887.

The agony is over, the much vexed question is settled, and Frank B. Stockbridge, of Kalamazoo, is the gentleman who will take Senator Conger's place in the U. S. senate when that old war horse retires next March, as there is no doubt the action of the caucus will be confirmed on the 18th inst.

Frank B. Stockbridge was born at Bath, Me., and is in his 61st year. In 1847 he came west and embarked in the lumber business in Chicago. He afterwards bought and operated extensive mills at Saginaw, Mich., residing there until 1873. In 1880 he represented the second Allegan district in the state legislature, and in 1881 was chosen to represent his county in the state senate. In 1884 he removed to Kalamazoo. In 1885 he was appointed U. S. minister to the Hague, but did not accept on account of his wife's health. Since that time he has held no office, giving his attention to his varied business interests. He has always been a strong Republican, ever ready and liberal when an emergency arose requiring pecuniary or other aid. The colonel is immensely wealthy and has one of the finest residences in Kalamazoo. He is a man of the people, easily approached, and popular with all who know him.

Undoubtedly the success of Col. Stockbridge's candidacy is largely due to the indefatigable efforts of S. Olds and Wm. VanBuren, of this city, who are indisputably hustlers of the first order. They had able lieutenants in Root. Smith, of the Ithaca Journal, Will Squich, of Grand Rapids, and Jim Monroe, of Kalamazoo.

No one on earth could have done more to push forward the candidacy of Senator Conger than did Gen. Wm. Hartsuff, of Port Huron. What the general don't know about political manipulation ain't worth bothering about. He has held office and pulled wires for the past 20 years, and it is safe to say he has seldom pulled the wrong wire or, pulled at the wrong time. It was he who, in the contest of political giants, welded the straggling Congerites into a solid phalanx, and though he was outnumbered he was not outgeneraled. It did seem to the casual observer that about all the "solid men" of the seventh congressional district had struck Lansing and were doing their level best for Mr. Conger, but I am persuaded that it was Gen. Hartsuff, cool, calculating schemer that he is, whose masterly leadership brought the defeated veteran so near re-election.

I think most of those who attended the late Republican caucus will agree with me that Senator Lewis G. Palmer from the 24th district Mecosta and Montcalm counties is one of the finest orators in the legislature. He most effectually aired his eloquence in the caucus in behalf of Col. Stockbridge, and certainly made a very favorable impression. He has a clear accentation, a full chest tone without the slightest harshness, a remarkable command of language and no paucity of ideas. Besides he is immensely popular with all who know him.

In witnessing the closing scenes of the caucus my mind recurred vividly to the pathetic story of Rienzi, the last of the Roman tribunes. Despite the fierce internecine strife of the Colonna and Orsini he had given to the Roman people a republic, liberty and unexampled prosperity. Ere his life closes by the ruthless dagger of the assassin we see him on the balcony of the capitol, from whence his magic eloquence had often stirred the hearts of the multitude below. As he sees the murderous throng climbing the palisades and clamoring for the life that had been spent in their service the eyes of Rienzi are involuntarily filled with tears—not that "the noblest Roman of them all" dreads what is before him, but he pityingly feels the ingratitude of his misguided countrymen. Had Senator Conger been permitted to speak before the caucus preceded to a ballot I verily believe he would have been re-elected. It seemed to me during his speech the face of more than one showed signs of regret at having thus cast the old man heartlessly aside. But then votes were beyond recall. When the time came for congratulations Senator Conger stood alone, defeated and almost unobserved, while Stockbridge and showered upon him their compliments, anon making cruel and cutting remarks anent the defeated senator, which he could not help [illegible] some one said something especially galling, and Mr. Conger, with great tears in his eyes and a look of most intense pain upon his face, stole silently out among them and disappeared [illegible] Hubbell is quite a fellow and manages to make himself cool and heated in a twinkling if he is anywhere within a block of the vicinity. He is one of those omnipresent individuals who, on all occasions like the late Republican senatorial caucus, somehow seems to divide himself into a variety of climaxes of political keenness and thus present himself in many of the exciting situations simultaneously. During the caucus he attracted attention by hopping about, nimble as the little Spaniard, with an unlighted cigar between his teeth, in which position the weed still remained when your correspondent retired, as though firmly secured in its place by an application of Spalding's prepared glue.

Daniel P. Mackey, of Ogemaw, speaker of the house of representatives is quite a young man yet, being but 29 years of age, and is probably the youngest man ever called to that responsible position. He is an Irishman by birth, having first saw the light of day in the township bearing the historical name of Burkleigh. He is bright and a forward a thoroughbred as ever [illegible] and his friends declare he will not stop till he has achieved still greater honors and distinction than his old victory gives him.

If Representative Ramsey did not secure the speakership he doubtless propose to let his defeat impair his usefulness on the floor of the house. He will introduce a bill to make the selling of Bohemian oats such a state prison offence, and if the bill should become a law many an honest though gullible farmer will have occasion to rise up and call him blessed.

The executive board of the Knights of Labor held a prolonged session in this city last Thursday, at the Commercial house, the purpose being the mapping out of plans for the guidance of the K. of L. members of the legislature, and the appointment of a committee to remain in the city during the session to keep a weather eye upon any and all legislation bearing upon labor investigation. After discussing the whole question thoroughly it was decided that positive action should be taken, but that members should be trusted to do their duty faithfully in all matters affecting labor interests.

Senator Babcock, of Sanilac, proposes to push his prohibitory constitutional amendment through both houses at the most rapid rate such things can possibly attain, and expects it will take about ten days to do the work. If he fails in this he will introduce a square local prohibitory law, which may be passed by a majority simply instead of a two-thirds vote. Maybe the senator will succeed and maybe he won't, but in the meantime he intends to pump himself.

WIDE-AWAKE FOR JANUARY, 1887.

The frontispiece of the New Year's Wide Awake, "The Pigeon Tower of Grandval," will at once attract readers to the very interesting article by the artist, Mr. Henry Bacon, entitled "The Doves of the French Revolution," a most quaint contribution to historical knowledge. A charming feature is the long Christmas story by Sarah Orne Jewett, "The Christmas Guest," and a notable feature is the second paper of "the Longfellow literature" promised for this year—"An Old House," which describes the old Longfellow home in Portland, and is fully illustrated by drawings and photographs. A choice piece of biographical work is Mrs. Bolton's article in her "Successful Women" series about Miss Mary L. Booth, the editor of Harper's Bazar. Mrs. Jessie Benton Fremont, in "Tally and Buster, II," describes an entertainment by children to raise money for the care of wounded soldiers in the since of the Civil War, Mrs. Davis, in her series "In War Times at La Rose Blanche," chronicles the devotion of a little colored boy to his master, under the title, "The Chunnels Vally"—another chapter of the Civil War. $3 40 per year. AN OPEN LETTER.

Demonstrating the Value of Bran for Fattening Stock

The Northwestern Miller of December 15th, 1886, says: The subjoined letter from Thos. Ewing, Leavenworth, Kan., banker, to John Crosby, president of the Millers' National Association, will be read with deep interest by millers and stock growers.

My Dear Sir—I am most happy to [illegible] in your kind invitation to write you. One of the reasons for, as well as the profitable feeding wheat bran to fattening beef cattle, is to encourage the good work generally, and especially the experiments now on trial at your place. We are [illegible] understanding. Corn meal is better known as the standard feed in the west. We make [illegible] Prof. W. A. Henry, of the experimental station of Wisconsin, reports the average of four analyses of bran—three made by the United States Bureau of agriculture, the other at the station, from a sample taken from a car load brought to the Washburn Mills, Minneapolis, for their own use, as follows:

BRAN WATER FREE.

	Per Cent.
Ash	7.11
Protein	17.44
Crude Fibre	8.16
Nitrogen free extract	61.54
Fat	5.75
	100.00

The most valuable element of the food is the protein, which is contained in its purest state in the white of eggs, in lean meat, and in the muscles of the ligaments, membranes, nerves, veins, arteries, etc. The nitrogen free extract is represented best by starch, or bodies closely allied to starch.

Dr. Grossman, of the experimental station of Massachusetts, in the bulletin for July, 1886, states that one ton of bran contains [illegible] of proteine, while one ton of corn meal contains [illegible] of proteine, and that the former is more digestible in the ratio of 88 to 83. By comparing the number of pounds digestible in each—297.1 for bran to 237 for corn meal—we find a difference of 60.1 lbs per ton, or showing corn meal to contain only about four-fifths as much digestible matter of this valuable ingredient of animal food as bran does.

Prof. Arnold, and other sound agricultural writers, also claim that the chemical analysis of bran shows that it contains one and a quarter times as much available flesh forming, lean meat producing substance as corn meal.

It is generally known that the ordinary coarse fodders of the farm contain an abundance of starch, which, while necessary for the animal, may be supplied much cheaply than in grain. Also that these fodders are relatively deficient in proteine, which is also essential to the best growth and development of the animal; hence economy suggests the feeding of some grain with the hay and fodder, and as proteine is the main element sought after in the grain thus fed, the kind of feed that supplies the largest amount of proteine at the same cost is the most economical. Hence bran, at the same cost per ton as corn meal, is much cheaper. We believe that experiment will prove this wherever it has an impartial trial. Science seems to say that bran is 25 per cent cheaper than corn meal.

We are now feeding some steer calves of 1885, that have never had any other grain but bran. They are the most satisfactory of 10 years' feedings; seven of them were shown at the state fair here Sept. 30, and weighed an average of 1,180 lbs each. They seem to be doing as well as ever. We feed the bran dry, and all they will eat up clean.

Dr. G. W. Hogeboom, chief surgeon of the Santa Fe railroad system, is feeding 60 steers on bran, and reports that they have outgrown his neighbors, fed on corn, two to one, during the same time. Hon. G. W. Veale & Son are also feeding some cattle on bran. They report them as gaining satisfactorily. D. J. Small & Bros. are feeding about 300 beef cattle on bran, with very gratifying results. They have, undoubtedly, the finest quality Christmas beeves in this state. O. P. Updegraff, Hon. J. S. McAfee, Thos. Curran, Chas. W. Nelson and a host of others are feeding half bran.

I notice by the market reports that bran is quoted at $8 per ton at your place, while corn is quoted at $15 per ton in Lots at $17 50 per ton. This can not always be. There is more work, more muscle, in bran pound for pound than in corn, as a horse food. Why ship the cattle from the parts to the corn beds of Illinois or Iowa, to rip them for market, when they can stop in transit at Manhattan, where the best pen of the finest beef on earth for making beef is enormous. He who raises three pounds of bran ought to be rewarded, where only two were grown before, is a public benefactor. Very truly yours,

THOS. EWING, JR.

HOW OF FRANK NOT THERE.

In Michigan it is settled that Senator O. D. Conger, Republican, is to be succeeded by Frank B. Stockbridge of Kalamazoo, Republican and millionaire. The report is that Mr. Stockbridge accomplished this result by spending money freely in the nomination and election of his own friends as members of the State Legislature. He will add to the plutocratic character of the Senate, but whether he will add to its legislative value remains to be proved. We must say also that Mr. Conger has not maintained, as a Senator, the high reputation for debating power which he enjoyed in the House. In this, however, he forms no exception to the general rule. The brilliant leaders of the House, when carried over into the Senate, have often appeared commonplace, lazy, and inefficient.—New York Sun.

NOW-A-DAYS.

BY ANDREW LANG.

Now how everything has changed
Since I was young!
When all the girls wore homespun frocks
And aprons nice and clean
With bonnets made of braided straw
Tied close beneath the chin
And shawls laid neatly over the back
And fastened with a pin.

But now-a-days girls wear no more
Such high three-storied hats
Wash feathers ranging all around
To cover up the flats,
Such frocks that fall so very low
And trail so vast behind,
They remind the glass for the lady's
Yet scarcely more than the blind.

And they [illegible]
With almost half an ell
Trailing in the mire
In wagon or in shelf,
And as for going to the wood
Or helping mother to bake,
Oh what would spoil a silk dry goods
From taking angel cake.

When snow would fall I was so pleased
And now a sad heart I utter
As each beau took his sweetheart out
Sleighriding in his cutter;
But oh! the shoes and stockings
The girls and boys wear
Would meet and have a good straw ride
In spite of wind and weather.

But now, indeed, it grieves me much
That I am forced to mention,
However kind a young man's heart
On honest his intention,
He dare not ask a girl to ride
But such a war is waged!
That if he sees her more than twice
Why! they must be engaged!

I and Mikes! what are we coming to?
Is what I want to know?
How do the girls expect to have
A sensible young beau?
Whether they get a nice young man
They cutting great a dash!
And then digestion (result from corset)
A universal crash!

THE STORY OF A MINE.

By BRET HARTE.

[Copyrighted, 1886, by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., and published by arrangement with them.]

Even the public press lent itself to the great inconsistency. It was as clear as crystal to the journal on one side of the avenue that the country was going to the dogs unless the spirit of the fathers once more reanimated the public; it was equally clear to the journal on the other side of the avenue that only a rigid adherence to the letter of the fathers would save the nation from decline. It was obvious to the first named journal that the "letter" meant government patronage to the other journal. It was potent to that journal that the "shekels" of Senator X really animated the spirit of the fathers. Yet all agreed that it was a great and good and perfect government—subject only to the predatory incursions of a hydra headed monster known as a "ring." The ring's origin was wrapped in secrecy, its fecundity was alarming, but although its rapacity was preternatural, its digestion was perfect and easy. It circumvolved all affairs in an atmosphere of mystery, it clouded all things with the dirt and stains of calumny. All disappointment of place, of avarice, of incompetency or ambition, was clearly attributable to it. It even permeated private and social life; there were rings in our kitchen and household service, in our public schools that kept the active intelligences of our children passive; there were rings of engaging, handsome, dissolute young fellows, who kept us moral for momentous stakes from the favors of the fair. There were social conspiring rings among our creditors which kept us into bankruptcy and restricted our credit. In fact it was not safe to hazardous to say that all that was calamitous in public and private experience was fairly traceable to that combination of power in a minority over weakness in a majority, known as a ring.

Happily there was a body of domingo as yet uninvoked, who should speedily settle all that. When Smith, of Minnesota, Robinson, of Vermont, and Jones, of Georgia, returned to congress from those rural seclusions so potent with information and so freed from local prejudices, it was understood, vaguely, that great things would be done. This was always understood. There never was a time in the history of American politics when to use the expression of the journals before alluded to, "the present session of congress" did not shiver to be the most momentous in our history," and did not, as far as facts go, leave a vast amount of unfinished important business lying hopelessly upon its desk, having "doubled" the rest as rashly and with as little regard to digestion or assimilation as the American traveler has for his railway refreshment.

In this capital, on this languid midsummer day, in an upper room of one of its second rate hotels, the Hon. Pratt C. Gashwiler sat at his writing table. There are certain large, fleshy men with whom the omission of even a necktie or collar has all the effect of an indecent exposure. The Hon. Mr Gashwiler, in his trousers and shirt, was a sight to be avoided by the modest eye. There were such painful suggestions of vast extents of unctuous flesh in the slight glimpse offered by his open throat that the indishable sight have been as private as his business. Nevertheless, when there was a knock at his door, he unhesitatingly said, "Come in" pushing away a goblet of wine with a certain aromatic herb with his right hand, while he drew toward him with his left a few proof slips of his forthcoming speech. The Gashwiler brow became as it were, intelligently abstracted.

The intruder regarded Gashwiler with a look of familiar recognition from his right eye, while his left took in a rapid survey of the papers on the table, and gleaned sardonically.

"You are at work, I see," he said apologetically.

"Yes," replied the congressman, with an air of perfunctory weariness, "some of my speeches. Those d—d printers make such a mess of it. I suppose I don't write a very fine hand."

If the gifted Gashwiler had added that he did not write a very intelligent hand, or a very grammatical hand, and that his spelling was faulty, he would have been truthful, although the copy and proof before him might not have borne him out. The near fact was that the speech was compiled and written by one Expectant Dobbs, a poor retainer of Gashwiler, and the honorable member's labor as a proof-reader was confined to the introduction of such words as "anarchy," "oligarchy," "satrap," "palladium," and "Argus-eyed" in the proof, with little relevancy as to position or place, and no pertinency.

"The strange man saw all this with his left eye, but continued to beam mildly with his right. Removing the coat and waistcoat of Gashwiler from a chair he drew it toward the table, pushing aside a pretty jumble of [illegible] with his own hand, he sat down, falling upon his chair, and the latter to contemplate the perspective of his own generosity and self-abnegation. Mr Wiles took his hat and turned to go. Dropping the door Mr. Gashwiler called [illegible]

"You"

"I am at your service, sir, [illegible]

Mr. Wiles [illegible] the saddle, laid on the sand [illegible] and only said, with his right [illegible]

"By G—d, I don't know how to represent Rohma."

[illegible] "An awfully thirsty woman a particular friend of mine." Mr. Gashwiler looked as if he would not mind to have been called a little over his intimacy with the fair one, but the astute Mr. Wiles was at the same moment making up his mind, after intercepting the congressman's look and manner that he must know this fair incognita. It was best to say Gashwiler. He determined to bide his time, and withdrew.

The door was scarcely closed upon him when another knock arrested Mr Gashwiler's attention from his proofs. He then opened to a young man with sandy hair and freckled face. He entered the room depressingly as if conscious of the presence of a powerful being, to be simplified and feared. Mr Gashwiler did not [illegible] unfriendly. "Busy, you see," he said shortly, correcting your work."

"I hope it is acceptable," said the young man timidly.

"Well, you—it will do," said Gashwiler, "indeed I may say it is satisfactory on the whole," he added with the approval [illegible] large generosity, "quite satisfactory."

"You have no news, I suppose," continued the young man, with a shade doubt, leaven of pride or expectation.

"No, nothing as yet." Mr Gashwiler paused as if a thought had struck him.

"I have the right [illegible] some position—such as a [illegible] me—would help you to a better appointment. Now, supposing that I make you my private secretary, giving you a [illegible] and confidential [illegible]

He [illegible] toward his portmanteau as if it contained a treasury at least the great essential [illegible] say.

Dobbs assented. "Then my duties will keep me with you here," he added hesitatingly.

"No, no," said Gashwiler hastily, then, on meeting himself, he added, "that is for the present, no."

Poor Dobbs faintly felt. The near lady was that he had lately had notice to quit his poor lodgings in consequence of arrears in his rent, and he had a hopeful reliance that the confidential occupation would carry bread and lodging with it. But he only asked if there were any new papers to make out.

"Ahem! not at present, the fact is I am obliged to give so much of my time to officers—I have to day been obliged to see half a dozen that I must ask myself in and so. Not at home for the rest of the day." [illegible] that this was an intimation that the interview was over, the new private secretary, a little dashed as to his most hopeful [illegible] of the future, humbly took his leave.

But here a certain psychic or perhaps mindful of poor Dobbs, threw into his simple hands, to be used or not, if he were worthy or capable of using it, a certain power and advantage. He had descended the stairs and was passing through the [illegible] when he was [illegible] remarkable [illegible]

IN MEMORY OF LOGAN

[illegible]

[illegible] Husband and father [illegible] Home was [illegible] shadow as the death angel removed a living presence, a human form left a void in the home, a home in earthly that now is heaven.

Mrs. Logan is almost as widely known as her noted husband. Her name has become almost a household word throughout our land. She was proud of his manhood honored him for his work and success, she was kind, glad in whatever of [illegible] of good he accomplished. Her love [illegible] [illegible] Home was her retreat from all the perplexities and cares of public life. And in it there was the benediction of a wedded life of thirty-one happy years. He was her tower of strength, the joy of his soul.

Who can write it, save the hand of the eternal, what are the hopes, the joys and the memories of wedded hearts, who for years live in each other's love, amicity and welfare. It is enough to move our souls anew and cause us to look into the faces of our own and consecrate ourselves to all that is supreme in life, holy in affection, divine in family relation and its sacred ties. In the universal presence, there can be but one law that seals alike the fidelity of husband and father with that of wife and mother. With many fathers and mothers, and into the homes of earth will come the Christ children that are to bless the world, redeem mankind and usher in the better day of light, truth, love and God.

I purpose now to speak in memory of him who has gone as a Patriot, as a Soldier, as a Citizen, as a Husband and as a Christian.

In 1861, when the clash of arms was heard, John A. Logan left the seat in Congress and led into the ranks, a patriot and a soldier for the Union. Soon after the first battle on the soil of Virginia, he returned to Illinois and grandly championed the cause of the Republic. It was he who turned the tide of treason in Southern Illinois. Mighty action and speech swayed his soul and moved the people. On that great day he attended to follow forever the flag of his country, and it was he, who now, by way to the grave. It was an impulsive, but patriotism and liberty fired his being and he could not keep it subdued. He never smothered the convictions of a soul. He faced the enemy as one of the bravest of the brave and would have shed his life for human good and freedom. Through his earnest effort and appeal thousands pulled as volunteers around the old banner as its defenders. He organized the Thirty-first Illinois Regiment of Infantry September 5th that regiment was mustered into service and within weeks later met the opposing foe and received its baptism of shot and shell and fire. He became a major under General Marsh, 5th [illegible] was promoted to a Major General ship November 20th [illegible]. When Sherman started on his unparalleled march to the sea, Logan led the Army of the Tennessee. He was in the van. At that mighty siege of Atlanta as General McPherson fell amid a storm of bullets, Logan rushed to the dead and dying, and he long his heart strained in the wind, his sword flashing in the sunlight, shouting "Boys, I'll [illegible]

[illegible] Seven successive times the enemy [illegible] repulsed attacks. At [illegible] were left upon the battle field. With this is a mere outline of a thought. I declare the image of that man was awful.

General Logan was a brave soldier. He has been tested. [illegible] For Other and mother a love abide [illegible] [illegible] Sherman and Sheridan [illegible] [illegible] Northern Soldiers of Nebraska have loving souls in that [illegible] and they retire the 4th of March of this year 1887. I believe the great work in part that marshaled the blue and the gray has ended forever. Today in sympathetic love we tribute to the fund, in memory of him who has gone, for the memory of her who is now a widow. They lived in generous in peace as they were brave in conflict. Never were the North and the South so bounded in ties of friendship as now, never so devoted to liberty, equality and law. The heroes are fast passing away, may their memories never perish, their lessons never be forgotten. Ours now, is the grandest and strongest free government of the earth. Victory and peace abide and may we and our children, and children's children, hallow sacred names, revere heroic deeds and perpetuate remembrance as the priceless legacy of freedom.

His published made him a quality's friend. Grant, Lincoln and with [illegible] [illegible] and defended the cause of the friendless and the poor. He stood by and upheld like a sentinel of heaven. For human welfare, for the weal of a commonwealth, no bribe could make him false. Upon him no stain of corruption exists. Sixteen years in Congress [illegible] the blood of their [illegible] [illegible] years in war and twenty-five years in Congressional life, Logan was poor in purse but rich in a good name. To his only son who bears the image and name of his honored father, he could have left an ill-gotten fortune, but he left him that which is far above rubies. Like Aristides Logan could say, "These hands are clean." He could love like a woman, sport like a child, hope like a saint. He was intense in grief, impulsive for the right, wonderfully true and frank. His dislikes were deep, almost ling to almost a hatred. In whatever enlisted his, he gave it not make believe effort but espoused it with his whole soul. He had the courage of convictions and this made him strong in debate, fearless in controversy, persistent against wrong and unflinching and uncompromising in his integrity.

His greatness in the main was the result of an almost unexampled heroism. He permitted no underminings, no falsity, no intrigue to better him. To these he never bowed. They found no sanction within him. When convinced of what seemed to him to be the merits of the case, then no party prescience, no personal consideration could swerve him a hair. This would have made him a hero in any age or in any country. Such in spirit composed, the legions of Cæsar were numbered among the Goths who entered Rome, were clothed as Gods by Scandinavians, and resembled the unconquered valor of the Norsemen. He never had to explain his position or apologize for what he had spoken. He said what he meant, meant what he said and stood by it. That he [illegible] I would to heaven, this partisan, party playing and two faced [illegible] for they are deserting satans were cast out forever. Typical American was Logan. Not perfect, not claiming to be so, not personally and in morals one of the most men in the great 19th century. Think of [illegible] the members of which were [illegible] Congress. Let Logan rest. Let the people [illegible] [illegible] Let [illegible] write it a [illegible] He was an honest man.

"Pearl of Savoy" at the opera house Monday night.

J. J. Freeman, who has been visiting in Tecumseh for the past week returned to Bellevue Monday.

Rev. W. J. Black, of Ridgeway, officiating at the revival meetings at the M. E. church in this village.

Dr. Leman Barnes has opened his campaign and will practice medicine in this village. The doctor will undoubtedly receive his share of the public patronage as he well deserves.

A very pleasant occasion was the public installation of officers of Beer's Post last Friday evening. The ceremony of installation was pronounced by Past Commander S. P. Hosmer, and an address was given by Chaplain Barnes. Music and refreshments made up the balance of the program. A goodly number of visitors was present besides the members and their wives.

Commencing Monday evening, Jan. 17, the famous Metropolitans will play a four nights' engagement in this village, opening with the play, "Pearl of Savoy." Admission 25cts. Reserved seats 35cts at Adamson's jewelry store. The company has received many favorable notices from the press and will undoubtedly draw crowded houses.

Rev. J. M. Gutchell—Dear Sir: We the undersigned, members of Beer's Post 150, G. A. R., of Tecumseh, respectfully request that you present a copy of your sermon on Gen. Logan for publication.

Wm. Smith, J. M. Ingersoll,
D. P. Spalding, Wm. Smallridge,
H. W. Stevens, W. S. Morse,
A. W. Slayton, H. Sweet,
George Smith.

The request has been complied with and the sermon appears on the fourth page.

A pleasant surprise was inflicted upon Frank and Ida Russell last Friday evening. The surprisers were about 20 strong—young folks from Tecumseh, and came upon them in the calm hours of the night packed into a bob sleigh. They were received with open arms and soon filled the house with mirth and fun. Later on they sat down to a table loaded with all that was good for the inner man, after which it was some time after the party drove home.

Tecumseh will soon have another toboggan slide. The lovers of the sport have increased so rapidly that one slide seems inadequate to accommodate the rush. Henry Mensing is making a second one at the east end of Shawnee street, back of the Lagey place. The slide will start from a platform about twenty feet above the level of the ground, and have an inclination of about 15 degrees for over one hundred feet. The entire track from the start to the finish will be sixty feet in length. About midway of the track there is a second steep declivity, which will give the toboggan an extra boost on the last part of the track. Mr. Mensing is finishing the work as rapidly as possible and expects to have it ready for business tomorrow evening.

Mr. E. H. Custer of Monroe, has been visiting at L. T. Elliott Gray's since before Christmas. Last Saturday his daughter, Mrs. Calhoun of Detroit, came out for a brief visit and remained till Wednesday. On Tuesday evening a large company assembled at L. T. Gray's in honor of his guest, Mrs. Calhoun. A superior phonetist and favored the company with several choice selections from her repertoire. Several of our best singers from the village were present and an enjoyable program was rendered much to the pleasure of all who were present. The affair was wholly informal as it was got up on short notice but it was none the less enjoyable on that account. The fortunate ones who were invited to gain an acquaintance with Mrs. Calhoun hope that she may visit Tecumseh within a reasonable time of some future time.

The Carrier Boys' address of the Detroit Free Press for New Year's 1887 has been received, and among them all it takes the cake. It is printed in pamphlet form and has an elegant embossed cover in red and gold. The address itself represents a newsboy who visited a poet in his garret to solicit a few verses. The poet responds with a doleful screed on editorial life. The newsboy thereupon grows indignant and revises the poem after his own style. The illustrations are neat and unique.

The Art Amateur for January now on our table is a magnificent number which in addition to the full number of designs and sketches, has four large full sheet supplements containing designs, some of them from the Royal School of Art Needlework at South Kensington, and adapted for dollies, mats, panels, church vestments, piano covers, also studies for oil work on canvas. We should think that our many ladies interested in decorative art, would find the Art Amateur with its monthly instalments of fresh and beautiful designs, an indispensable thing.

A few old friends of Mr. and Mrs. John Brown, of Addison, assembled on Tuesday, Jan. 11th, at the home of their son, L. M. Brown, in Rollin, to celebrate the 50th anniversary of his parents' wedding. THE SCHOOL SCRAPBOOK

The Public Schools resumed work for the winter term on Monday Jan. 3d, with an increased attendance in all the departments.

The total enrollment in the High School this term is 85, of which 42 are in the A division and 43 in the B division. Twenty nine of these are non-resident pupils. There are three foreign pupils in grades below the High School.

The following studies were completed in the High School last term: English Analysis, Physical Geography and U. S. History. New classes have been organized this term in Arithmetic, English History and Rhetoric. The Arithmetic class contains 72 pupils and is divided into two sections.

There has been much complaint about cold rooms during the recent severe weather. It is almost impossible to properly heat the west rooms in the Central Building. When the rooms are not too cold, the coal gas generally escapes, making the air very impure.

The Philosophy class are now enjoying experiments in electricity.

Prof. Hanchon spent a portion of his holiday vacation in attendance upon the meeting of the state Teachers' Association at Lansing. The session proved to be a very interesting and profitable one.

Several new charts have been recently introduced some in the High School to aid in teaching Physiology and one or two in the lower grades to aid the little ones in memorizing the definitions of statistics, rivers, etc.

It is rumored that the School Board contemplate putting new desks in the B. room of the High school next year. A stove, enclosed in a large drum, has been put up in Miss Lamb's room, to aid in heating the room.

ROLL OF HONOR.

Below are the names of those pupils who were neither absent nor tardy, and whose standing was 90 per cent or above during the month ending Dec. 24, 1886.

TEMPERANCE COLUMN.

Edited by a Committee of the W. C. T. U.

NATIONAL AID FOR COMMON SCHOOLS.

Senator Voorhees Say.

The measure now before the Senate has never been surpassed in the nation and bears evidence of its spirit not in the magnitude. And value of its immediate and ultimate purposes.

I am told, Mr. President, that, with the good purposes of this bill, [illegible] the surplus, [illegible] the money. Money is not more plenty in the treasury because [illegible] and do not know, [illegible] power [illegible] finally inserted in the constitution. [illegible] destroyed. I think I believe [illegible] in this Government. [illegible] was to live, not to die.

Senator Vance, North Carolina.

We did the best we could under the circumstances. We reorganized the public schools, we replaced on the [illegible] we could, the [illegible] which they had been appointed. Select as much taxation as were possible [illegible] mentally its children. [illegible] in North Carolina [illegible] support of public schools. [illegible] per annum [illegible] whose taxation helped for the support of the State government.

Poor as we are, we have [illegible] indiscriminately, without regard to [illegible] benefit of the interest [illegible] North Carolina.

Senator Blair of New Hampshire.

Every Northern industry is [illegible] by this cheap labor [illegible] the lead and [illegible] manufacturer and operative in cotton and wool. It is a question of preserving our vested capital and property, [illegible] of protecting the masses of our people in reasonable hours of [illegible] employment, with fair pay that will enable them to support the [illegible] advanced civilization.

Now what does this National Education bill propose to do. Not to interfere with the development of the South by any means, but, on the contrary, to increase it. It proposes to make Southern labor and the Southern masses more intelligent, and therefore more highly civilized to create among their rapidly multiplying millions of [illegible] a vast increase of the wants of life which must be supplied, so that Southern labor will [illegible] as well as produce, and thus [illegible] as high wages as Northern labor, putting an end to the competition of the [illegible] improving both sections by uplifting the masses of the people all over the country.

"Consumption can only increase by increasing the capacity to enjoy, that is, adding to the wants of life by light of civilization, and providing higher wages or returns for labor whereby to purchase the more diversified and costly supply of the necessaries and comforts of a higher life.

"In so far as ignorance and vice exist, republican government fail. The forms of freedom may continue but the substance will be eaten out, and ultimately the structure will fall.

Senator Call, Florida.

It does not matter or concern the object of this bill why it is that this grievous evil is upon this country, but the bill proposes to give aid to the States in conformity with the principles of this Government for the eradication of an admitted evil, an evil which unquestionably threatens the prosperity of this country and its future welfare, not alone in one, but in every point of view. The bill has been carefully considered and we have determined, after full consideration by the committee, in conformity with the opinion of the educators throughout the country that this would be a fair proposition.

The chairman has bestowed great care and labor upon it, but it has come from the careful consideration of a large number of intelligent persons, who have voluntarily gave without compensation their efforts and their time to the consideration of the question.

Senator Brown, Georgia.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington D. C. Jan. 8th 1887.

When Congress reassembled after the holiday vacation two weeks ago Friday an announcement was made to the members at the Capitol of the death of Senator Logan. As is customary, both the Senate and the House adjourned immediately [illegible] respect to his memory. Consequently Congress has worked but three days so far this week, and can do but a poor showing even for that length of time.

Three Representatives in the lower branch of Congress have not been seen in Washington since Gen. Logan died. They are illness Congressmen, they each want the place left vacant by the dead Senator, and each is at home scheming and [illegible] to end. They are Gen. [illegible] and Messrs. Cannon and [illegible]. They are considered strong men and good workers by their party in the House, and the Republicans would be sorry to have any one of them leave the lower branch.

It was significant fact that of some hundred messages and letters of condolence received by Mrs. Logan upon her husband's death, only two had any allusions to the consolations of religion. These two exceptions are by Col. John Hay, the author of Jim Bludso, and Stephen A. Douglas, both of whom [illegible]

[illegible] EVERY FARMER'S CLUB

There was a large meeting of the club at the residence of W. J. Walker, Jan. 12. The literary programme was good. It was agreed that we adopt the new constitution. The following officers were elected: President, [illegible]; Secretary, [illegible]; Executive Committee, [illegible] and H. Hasse. H. Wilson and W. [illegible] were appointed to examine the books of the Treasurer and Secretary. The question for the next club was, "Which pays best, to feed fodder or sell it from the farm?" Which pays best, to sell the clover or feed it on the farm? and answer that question. [illegible] which pays best for this or some other particular season, but to make a general practice of it year after year is a subject of this kind I can only talk from a very limited experience. What I have had has been in feeding it to my fodder during the winter, with very little exception. My judgment [illegible] farm is [illegible] with the [illegible] farms [illegible] state of [illegible] we have got to study and work, we have got to improve our methods of farming or get the business. It will be not keep pure bred stock we have got to keep high grade and feed them high. I claim that a man had better let his hay from go out and go back into the ground than to feed it to stock in such a manner as to just keep them alive until spring. Stocking cattle, hogs or sheep through the winter, is is generally practical, does not pay for your fodder, much less over time throwing it out.

For an illustration as to the profit of selling or feeding, we will take a farm of 80 acres, with 50 acres of improvement. On this we will raise 20 acres of wheat, 10 of corn, 20 of hay, 5 of pasture, 5 of oats, 5 of potatoes, garden, etc. Thirty tons of hay would be a fair average yield of this farm, we will be required to keep 4 horses and two cows, and we will have the following:

2 tons hay, @ $[illegible]	$[illegible]
[illegible] bush. corn, @ [illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible] bundles stalks, @ [illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible] bush. oats, @ [illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	$[illegible]

At the sale would make a quite a large little income for a little farm of 80 acres for one year, and your income of pasture and 5 of garden, etc., not in the account.

Now we will figure on the profit of feeding your supplies:

Wool from 25 good ewes, [illegible] wethers, 200	[illegible]
20 lambs, @ $2.00	40.00
Milk, butter, etc., from 2 cows	70.00
400 lbs. pork, @ 4c	160.00
4 steers, profit for 5 mos	80.00
Value of manure	100.00
Total	$540.00
Difference in favor of feeding	$175.00

But this is not all the profit by this system of manuring you are continually adding to the fertility of your farm, while on the other hand, by selling your surplus grain and fodder you decrease it in the same ratio. A farmer to be successful should be progressive. He should not be content with plodding in the same old rut year after year, but should take and profit by experience.

In conclusion, I think we are apt to place too little value on the manure pile, which, if well taken care of and judiciously applied, forms a large per cent of the profits of the farm.

R. Hurry. I do not want it understood that I advocate selling hay, but I do sell when I have more timothy than I want to use and find it pays. I have kept account and find a profit of $[illegible] per ton to put hay on the farm. Where farms are rented hay pays the best, but should not want to rent my farm to a man and have him sell off all the hay. Question. Do you think that it hurts the land more to raise timothy hay and sell it, than to raise wheat and sell it? No, not if you grow it right up with wheat all the while.

Abner Wilson. I agree on the main point of this question, but you cannot lay down any iron clad plan for every farmer. If a man has the right kind of land he can sell the hay off without damaging the land, but on a sandy farm he cannot do it without putting something back. If I had a farm on rates for hay which hay is worth [illegible] ton I would sell at that if I [illegible] but not closer as I think it [illegible] more to feed. I do not think oats are is worth $[illegible] per ton. Phosphate and ashes are cheaper than farm manure at that price. It may not always pay to feed all the oats on the farm, as we have other feeds that pay better, and I think that a ton of bran is worth $10 to $15 per ton for manure [illegible] Can you not keep the land up with clover? Yes, but not if you sell the clover.

R. B. Gillespie. I have always made it a point to feed what I raised, and if there is anything that I can do to sell with a profit I do it. I can look up at my stock fit for market say, I feel and think it pays to winter a hog so that it weighs 300 lbs. in the spring [illegible] years old.

[illegible] and wanted to know if it would pay to feed it to the stock, I would say, for everything on the farm, it would pay. [illegible] and I would sell the clover seed. When I got in shape so that I can, I shall take care and feed a thousand [illegible] not to sell the hay and feed it all I can raise on the farm.

There were several speeches made as to the value of different kinds of hay for feed and manure, under the [illegible] etc., which were outside of the regular question, and were [illegible] put them in.

It was arranged for the [illegible] meeting at the residence of Mr. Fox [illegible] Jan. [illegible] with the following programme:

DEATH OF GEO. R. SOUTHWORTH.

Geo. R. Southworth, one of the best known hotel men in the state, died suddenly at his home in Jackson, at 11 o'clock, Sunday night. He was 78 years old, and heart disease ended his life while he was talking to his wife, after they had retired. He was clerk at the Hibbard house, but lived outside the hotel. Thirty years ago he was clerk in the Marion house, in Jackson. For a number of years following he held a similar position in the Tabor house, at Saginaw, after which he was employed by the Kalamazoo house, at Kalamazoo, for seven years, coming to Jackson again in 1877, and connecting himself with the Hibbard house. Besides his wife he leaves a son, George A. Southworth, located in Chicago, a mother, aged and infirm, living at Hudson; a brother, Capt. Ed. Southworth, postmaster of Hudson for twenty years, and a sister, Mrs. Chubb, also residing at Hudson.

The deceased was born in Tecumseh and learned his trade with his father in the old Woolen Mill, east of the Grain Mill. He kept the Morgan House in this village for some time before burned down, then went to Adrian and clerked in the Exchange with Eber Adams. He was with John Davenport for some time at Evans Lake. Our older residents remember him and will hear of his death with regret.

The Colored Plate in the New Year's Number of THE ART AMATEUR, "Marguerites," is a charming rendering, by Edith Scannell, of the always popular theme—a lovely child with daisies. The number also gives a beautiful decorative head, by Lilian Wetby; a pleasing design of children dancing, for a piano front; one of holly for wood carving, two for chasing ornamentation, six for dodies, and two for china painting—black raspberries and leaves for a jar and chrysanthemums for a panel, besides a large decorative study of ivy, and a page of monograms. There is a useful article on landscape painting; the series on fruit painting in oils is continued and a new series on portrait painting in the same method is begun, together with one on china painting. The ART AMATEUR for 1887 will be more than ever indispensable to all practical art lovers and art students. Price 35 cents. $4 a year. Montague Marks, Publisher, 23 Union Square, New York.

The room with the Lake Shore has been from two to three hours late every day this week.

OBITUARY—HERBERT MILLS BLAIR.

Mr. Blair was the only son of Dan [illegible] He was born in Franklin, Mich., December 18, 1864. His school days were largely spent in Ypsilanti, Mich., where he was married on December 1879, to Miss Ida M. Litten, a teacher in the public schools of that city. He died in Detroit, at the sanitarium, Dec. 6, 1886. The circumstances of his last illness, death were peculiarly painful. While a business transaction [illegible] was nearly at rest, and felt so much that he [illegible] to his home [illegible] for the spiritual [illegible] Although at [illegible] Dr. Mclean [illegible] with a [illegible] composure [illegible] disappointed to his family. With a natural horror of amputation he said to his friends "Boys, this leg had better, but let them take it off." Yet when the surgeons decision was made, and the limb was removed, he [illegible] without a word of censure and rallied to a heroic struggle for life. The amputation was unusually successful, and physicians gave him assurance that with his physical nerve and courage, the case was hopeful. Two days and a half he bravely held on to the brittle thread. Then cleared and strong and even cheerful, but the shock was too great, the tenement of clay was too weak to longer hold the courageous spirit. Few men called hence at the age of thirty-two would leave a prouder record than has Herbert Blair. Honest, intelligent, industrious, prompt and methodical in his business relations, he had the respect and confidence of business men. Courteous and genial, well balanced in judgment, and reliable in habits and principle, he was valued in social circles, and was rapidly growing into an assured and honored place in the world's esteem.

Memorial services were conducted at Detroit Junction, where he had passed but a few weeks, but had made his influence felt in church and Sabbath school work. His own pastor adds the following tribute to his Christian character:

Bro. Blair was assistant superintendent of our Sunday school and recording steward of the church. He was an earnest Christian, an indefatigable worker. Possessing an excellent voice, he delighted in the songs of Zion, and the church feels deeply his loss in that department of Christian worship, as well as in the many other places he so ably filled. He was held in high esteem by the community in which he lived, which was attested by the large and tearful audience that gathered at his funeral in Napoleon, Jackson Co. He leaves a wife and one child, a father and mother and three sisters, whose hearts are crushed with grief over the loss of a kind husband and father, an affectionate and only son, a beloved brother. He said to his wife, who sat by his bedside, "I [illegible] upon his grave, saying him to rest in the sure and certain hope of a glorious resurrection."

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Herbert M. Blair died at the Detroit Sanitarium, Detroit, Mich., Dec. 6, 1886. The Napoleon M. E. Sunday school of which he was an officer adopted the following preamble and resolution as a tribute to his memory.

WHEREAS, God in his infinite wisdom has again stretched forth His hand after an elapse of two years and four months, and taken from our midst a loved, honored officer and teacher, one who by his pleasing ways and straightforward christian example has endeared himself to all members of our school.

WHEREAS, in the sudden accident which took our brother, we recognize the hand of our Heavenly Father, and are admonished to be at all times ready, for we know not when the Son of Man cometh. Therefore,

RESOLVED, that our sincere and heartfelt sympathy and condolence be extended to the afflicted family in the sad hour of bereavement. You will miss him in the home life he loved so well. May you be cheered by the remembrance of his earnest christian life and though his smiling face is seen no more in your midst, and his voice no longer mingles with yours in "songs of praise," he is now singing the "song of the redeemed." May you be enabled to say "Thy will be done." "The Lord gave and the Lord taketh away, blessed be the name of the Lord." Though lost to sight his spirit has departed from this world of care and sorrow to a happier home above. Though we call him dead, yet he lives, not only in eternity, but in the hearts of all who knew him.

Herbert, having entered our Sunday school while a youth, was a faithful and interesting scholar, later as an officer he was always ready and willing to do his work in the Sunday school, where his voice was often heard pointing others to Jesus. We will remember the anxiety for the advancement and religious welfare of the school and especially in his class. We shall miss him in the choir where his strong, rich voice was wont to make the music. We shall miss him in the social circle where his frank and genial nature made him a welcome guest. We shall miss Herbert everywhere but we mourn not as those without hope, for our brother gave evidence all along the line that he was trying to walk with Christ, and we all trust that if we live well the duties of life we will meet on a brighter school in Heaven.

Resolved, that the above preamble and resolution be entered on Sunday school records and a copy be presented to the bereaved family.

DIED.

DUNN—In this village on Thursday, [illegible] years.

The deceased was formerly a resident of Chicago and for many years resided in Cambridge. For the past eight years she has lived in Tecumseh and by her womanly traits of character and christian walk has endeared herself to a large circle of friends. Her final illness was of several weeks duration and her suffering was borne with that calm fortitude and resignation which says: "Father thy will, not mine, be done." Two children survive her, namely, Harry T. Dunn, and Mrs. [illegible] of Sturgis, Mich. The remains were conveyed to Chicago and deposited in Rose Hill cemetery, where other members of her family rest in the sure and certain hope of a glorious resurrection. Her husband preceded her some years since. Peace be with her.

PENNOCK—Mrs. Mary A. Pennock was born in Macon, Lenawee Co., [illegible] Mich., on Monday morning, Jan. 10th, 1887, was 44 years of age last Sunday.

Of the home circle into which she was born she was the last to go. In her own family she leaves a husband, children and other relatives. Now they will cherish, amid the lingering remembrances of her love, her friendship and her kindness and the Father of us all may see in human souls traits of goodness, that we mortals do not see, and that some of us may not have. The best have some imperfection, the worst some spirit of good. The funeral services were held in the Universalist church, Wednesday the 12th inst. at 10 o'clock, Rev. D. M. Gerstlen the pastor officiating. Members of the G. A. R. Post, of which Mr. Pennock is a member were in attendance.

The fourth annual report of the Bureau of Labor has been received. It contains a large amount of statistical information of much value. We are indebted to C. A. R. Pond, State Commissioner of Labor, for the same.

THE TECUMSEH HERALD.

TECUMSEH MICH. JAN 20 1887.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

James Cook was in Detroit Monday on business.

E. C. Baird, of Detroit, was in town over Sunday.

Miss Carrie Hand was visiting friends in Brooklyn last week.

The bank flag was displayed on the occasion last Monday.

It looks now as though we would have a little sleighing this winter.

The new toboggan slide was christened last Saturday with a big crowd.

Will Hamilton, of Dundee, N. Y. was visiting his father in this village last week.

Mr. Oscar Heck assisted in the services at the Baptist church last Sabbath evening.

Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Buckley, of Walworth N. Y. returned home on Monday, after a few weeks stay with relatives here.

Church & Pegg, of Morenci, have dissolved. Church will continue the business and Pegg will peg it alone hereafter.

Last Saturday was the biggest day of the winter in Tecumseh. There was a tremendous crowd on the streets during the entire afternoon.

Miss Rena Oviatt, of Cleveland, Ohio, is spending a few days with Miss Libbie Robinson. She expects to remain here until the last of next week.

Thos. B. Gould, an old and respected citizen of Macon died last Tuesday morning. The funeral services were held at the Macon Baptist church this forenoon.

Al. H. Ford, of Lodi, has been getting up an elegant sign for the Saving's Bank of that city. It consists of brown raised letters, highly polished, with a gold back ground, and cost $55.

Alf. Mansell, who has been at work in the HERALD news room for the past few weeks, has gone to Midland City to visit his parents. It is his first visit home in eighteen months.

Twelve women from Dundee dropped down upon Mrs. W. J. Ide last Friday. They brought a man along to drive the team, as teamsters for the whole party. It was a very enjoyable surprise.

The first number of the Marshall Daily Statesman is at hand. It is a six column folio, well filled with local and general news. We extend our hand for a hearty shake and wish the venture unbounded success.

Clinton is proud over her success in raising the required bonus to rebuild the Woolen Mill. And she has good reason to be proud too. It was no small undertaking. $2,000 of the sum required was given by the farmers.

Our old townsman, Daniel E. Squier, now postmaster at Newaygo, is in Washington presenting a few points for the relief of third and fourth class postmasters. Daniel is a hustler and is making a good impression among the Solons at Washington.

The old Tecumseh woolen mill tumbled down last Friday. Why not organize a stock company and erect a new mill on the site. This would be a feasible project and could be easily carried out if two or three of our solid men would fearlessly lead the way. With a good leader, there would be plenty of followers in an enterprise of this kind.

Prof. Edward Olney, LL.D., holding the chair of mathematics in the University, was found dead in his bed on Sunday morning. Cause, heart disease. He was 69 years of age on July 24 last. He was Professor of Mathematics in the Kalamazoo College from 1853 to 1843, when he was called to his chair in the University. His fame was wide spread his text-books being in nearly every public school and college in America.

Bishop S. S. Harris preached at St Peter's church last Sunday morning and administered the rite of confirmation to a class of nine candidates. The bishop is a favorite in Tecumseh and the announcement that he would preach, drew a large congregation. The subject of his discourse was "Home." It was entirely extempore, and was delivered in an easy, conversational style that touched all hearts. The confirmation service, at the close, was most impressively performed, and many eyes were bedewed with tears when the benediction was pronounced.

A Branch county farmer reports a pumpkin 48 inches in diameter, which weighs 208 pounds. Has Tecumseh got any offset to this? Adrian Press.

We are proud to say that Tecumseh has. Our agricultural reporter informs us that a neighbor of John Schreder told him that John's hired man told him that Mr. Schreder raised a big pumpkin, on Judge Ed. Smith's big farm last summer, which stood so high in its stockings that John's little boy strayed round it behind it one afternoon and got lost. That pumpkin has supplied pumpkin pie for the family ever since, and Mr. Schreder keeps it up enough to wave a five hundred rain there monument with Macon Grange are requested to be present.

Oscar Heck returned to Kalamazoo college yesterday.

Go to the opera house tonight and hear the Metropolitans.

Arthur Sneckenor, of Ithaca, is in Tecumseh visiting friends.

Miss Etta Savage, of Adrian college, was the guest of Mrs. E. M. Gray last Monday.

Hannibal Osborn is engaged in cutting farm produce for the estate of [illegible]

Burl Darlinghouse took a trip to Jackson last Saturday. He only went for one day.

Mrs. Spencer Osborn, of Manchester, was the guest of her brother, Dr. L. Barnes, the last of the week.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Cook lost their infant child last Sunday. It was buried Tuesday.

Brewer's foundry is closed for repairs this week. The flues of the boiler are being replaced with new ones.

The death of Mrs. Jane Simmons took place in this village last Sunday at the age of 87 years. She was buried on Tuesday.

Charles Burger left last Monday afternoon for his home in Rushville, Neb. He goes back to a lonely home but the sympathies of all his Tecumseh friends go with him.

James H. Aten, of Tecumseh, has been re appointed deputy sheriff. He received his papers last Tuesday. "Jim" has made a good officer, and Sheriff Whitmore has fitly recognized his faithful services by continuing him in office.

In stating that Dr. Barnes had secured his "sheep skin" and would practice medicine, in last week's HERALD we did not mean to say he had just got it last week, far from it. The Doctor has had it many years, and practiced medicine 29 years ago.

Little Bell Palmer, aged seven years, only child of Thos. and Helen Palmer, of Hudson, fell a victim to diptheria on Sunday morning last. She was a lovely child, the pride and joy of her parents, and in her untimely death the light of that household has gone out. Mr. and Mrs. Palmer were relatives of Mrs W. A. Whitney of this village.

Elwood Comfort has received a keg of raisins from his brother, Aaron Comfort, of Fresno, Cal., containing 150 pounds. They were raised between Los Angeles and San Francisco. We had the pleasure of sampling one bunch that weighed half a pound. The keg contains raisins enough to supply the entire Comfort family for some time.

The Adrian Times of Monday publishes a lengthy account of a visit to the County poor house, which reveals a condition of affairs there most discreditable to the county authorities. The account may be colored somewhat by the imagination of the reporter, but it seems as though a thorough investigation into the management of the poor house ought to be made at once.

Mrs. Emma S. Hampton, past Department President of the W. R. C. is the guest of S. P. Sheldon's people. Mrs. Hampton and Mrs W. A. Whitney, for many years President of the Hudson Relief Corps, met a number of the wives of the comrades of Beer's Post at the G. A. R. hall last Tuesday afternoon to talk over the project of starting a Relief Corps in Tecumseh. It is quite probable that an organization will be effected here.

The severe weather this week has deterred many from getting out, and consequently the "Metropolitans" have played to rather small houses. The company is a strong one and the plays presented well put on. "The Pearl of Savoy" which was played Monday night is a drama of strong emotional character, and the leading parts were admirably sustained in fact all were. The company should have a crowded house to-night.

Alfred Smith, the little son of Wm. Smith, met with quite a severe accident at the M. E. church on Sunday evening. He went into the kitchen room to get a drink from the pump, and as it was dark, he fell through a trap door leading to the furnace room below. He sustained a severe bruise on the back of the head, and was pretty well shaken up, but is rapidly on the mend now. It is a wonder that he was not seriously maimed or killed. A railing will be put around the stairway to prevent the recurrence of such accidents.

The adjourned meeting of Macon Grange was held Jan. 14th, with a very enjoyable time was had. After transacting some very important business, and partaking of a bountiful dinner, which the sisters know so well how to provide, it was resolved that we adjourn to meet again in two weeks. Thursday, Jan 27th at ten o'clock, when officers will be elected and [illegible] at that time. The Hon. Wm. H. Osborn installing officer. Members wishing to [illegible] membership with Macon Grange are requested to be present.

Fort Wayne has lately organized a [illegible] society, which is to procure free graves [illegible] roads from the city into the surrounding country. Here is a hint for the business men of Tecumseh.

A country exchange says that when a cutter has passed a considerable distance over a well beaten road with one runner in soft snow the indications are that the driver was either sleepy or was talking to somebody with both arms.

In another column will be found a delayed obituary review of "Herbert Mills Blair." He was well and favorably known in this village as well as in the town of Franklin, where his boyhood days he resided with his parents.

Mrs. Elsworth Russell was seriously hurt about the face while riding down the gothic toboggan slide Tuesday evening. While going down she lost her hold upon the sled and raised off, cutting her lip and otherwise injuring her face.

The Clinton Local man says plaintively "We hear that the sleighing is superb, but know nothing of it from experience, as we own no farm out, too poor to hire, and no friends who invite us out for an airing."

There are several cases of diptheria at Hudson, and the authorities are adopting vigorous measures to check the epidemic. Six cases were reported to the Board of Health last week. The public schools of the village have been closed.

At the annual meeting of the Ladies' Social of the Universalist church on Friday Jan. 7, 1887, the following officers were elected.

Pres.—Mrs. W. T. Thorp.
Vice Pres.—Miss Lydia McNeil.
Sec.—L. Leana Stacy.
Treas.—Mrs. Geo. Hanford.

The renting of pews at the Baptist church last Tuesday afternoon and evening resulted in placing over [illegible] on the books. Owing to the severe weather, many friends from outside the village were not there. A bountiful supper was provided, from which the ladies realized a good sum.

Services next Sunday at the Universalist church. In the morning at 10:30 a sermon, by request, entitled: "A Mother's Heart Keeping." Text, Luke 2:51. In the evening at 7 o'clock a discourse on "The Hell I Dread or Fear." All invited in, strangers welcome.

The Metropolitan theatrical troupe is one of the best combinations that has visited Tecumseh in a long time. Taylor & Brown, the managers are courteous gentlemen and well up in their profession, and they carry excellent support. We hope they may book Tecumseh as one of their points next season.

There were eight of them, four males and four females, the time was Sunday night, the place east of Hudson. All the elements of fun entered into the sleigh-ride, including upsetting, etc. Had they not disturbed the neighborhood there would have been no publicity of the affair.—Hudson Post.

The Universalist Sunday School has elected the following officers for the coming year.

Superintendent—S. C. Stacy.
Asst. Supt.—Homer Bickford.
Lady Asst.—L. Leana Stacy.
Secretary—Emma Brown.

Postmaster Schermerhorn's severe illness prevented him from accepting an invitation from the executive committee of the National Postmasters' Association to accompany them to Washington on Monday in the interest of a measure now before Congress which will, if passed, reduce the rate to the duties and expenses of their offices and accord them a fair treatment as first and second class postmasters receive. WHAT CAME OF IT.

Stuart Willard was a knotted man, [illegible] the full and at the expiration of a few minutes was able to get up from the bed of mud into which he had fallen. But the [illegible]

"Six hundred dollars!" gasped poor Stuart [illegible] "Mr. Pieller [illegible] money at you wish to see it. I have it here, [illegible] breast pocket. Costly [illegible]

Stuart tried to speak but his tongue clove to the roof of his mouth. [illegible]

"Well, Mr. Pieller [illegible] Willard [illegible] "If I say I consider the debt paid [illegible] you will be wanting to leave me, I suppose," said Mr. Pieller.

"No, if you want me to stay, sir. I shall not go to school again. I am 18 years old and it is time I began to help my mother. I'll stay here if you want me to stay, sir."

Mr. Pieller gave a sharp laugh.

"That's modest, Willard, when you know as well as I do that I couldn't get along without you now. The day you came to me like the brave, honest boy you are, and confessed that you had killed my horse, I made up my mind that you were the boy I needed here. It was worth more than $600 to me to find some one on whose truth and honesty I could rely implicitly. If you will stay with me, Willard, I'll allow you a good salary from this day forward, and there'll be an excellent chance of promotion to something a good deal better."

Of course Willard stayed, and the "something a good deal better" proved to be a junior partnership at the end of eight years' service.

So you see, Stuart had reason to be thankful that the principles of honesty and truth instilled into him by his widowed mother led him to make the confession which resulted in saving him forever of his great fault, and placing him in a position of honor and trust.

Actress and Jeweler.

The late career of women who get into debt is the low one. One of these had a hard battle with the serpent, and which he was generally worsted. He had been steadily persuaded from making gay sojourns because he could not get his goods on her people. But one day word was brought to him that the lady was to hold a grand ball at her house that evening, and he determined to attend it. On the occasion, though he was [illegible] fashionably gotten up, [illegible] expensive dresses and will display all her costly knick-knacks about her apartments. One consideration only made the jeweler's scheme big. Knowing his customers, he saw that it would make him immensely popular if he should furnish a lady [illegible] in the jewels of her fashionable friends. So he went and with drew cards from his door, he made up his mind to wait till the conclusion of the fete before entering to make the seizure. So he secured the services of two officers and a coach and [illegible] past across the road from the actress' house. There he stopped and waited. The night was long and the [illegible] the way he was [illegible] the [illegible] that [illegible] the [illegible] the [illegible] the

Have never handled remedies that sell as well, or give such universal satisfaction. There have been some wonderful cures of Consumption in this city. Several cases of pronounced Consumption have been entirely cured by use of a few bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery, taken in connection with Electric Bitters. We guarantee them always. Sold by C. A. Wright & Co.

When a fellow rushes from a house into the street in a towering passion, it is an outrage.

When the eyes become weak or the lids inflamed and sore, a disordered system, or a scrofulous condition of the blood is indicated, for which Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best remedy. It invigorates and vitalizes the blood and expels all humors.

Cure-stamped politeness: "Please lend me a chew of tobacco, I will return it to you as soon as I get through with it."

The best on earth can truly be said of Grigg's Glycerine Salve, which is a sure safe and speedy cure for cuts, bruises, scalds, burns, wounds and all other sores. We guarantee it to cure piles, tetter and all skin eruption. Try this wonder healer. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Only 25cts. Sold by Dr. George Ferguson.

It may be remarked, in passing, that gloves are handy things to have about.

WHAT TRUE MERIT WILL DO.

The unprecedented sale of Boschee's German Syrup within a few years, has astonished the world. It is with doubt the safest and best remedy ever discovered for the speedy and effectual cure of Coughs, Colds and the severest Lung troubles. It acts on an entirely different principle from the usual prescriptions given by Physicians, as it does not dry up a Cough and leave the disease still in the system, but on the contrary removes the cause of the trouble, heals the parts affected and leaves them in a purely healthy condition. A bottle kept in the house for use when the disease make their appearance, will save doctor's bills and a long spell of serious illness. A trial will convince you of these facts. It is positively sold by all druggists and general dealers in the land. Price, 75 cts., large bottles.

The best medical writers claim that the successful remedy for nasal catarrh must be non-irritating, easy of application, and one that will, by its own action reach all the remote sores and ulcerated surfaces. The history of the efforts to treat catarrh during the past few years obliges us to admit that only one remedy has completely met these conditions; and that is Ely's Cream Balm. This safe and pleasant remedy has mastered catarrh as nothing else has ever done, and both physicians and patients freely concede this fact. The more distressing symptoms quickly yield to it.

BONNER IN OLD AGE.

THE MAN WHO WAS ONCE NOTED FOR QUAINT ADVERTISING.

Developing a Gold Mine by the Use of Printer's Ink—Wages Paid to Contributors—A Kind Critic in the Sanctum and at Home.

Not long ago I saw a man crossing the street, railway track near the Franklin station with the gait of an old horse. He wore old fashioned broadcloth, a hat [illegible] and a [illegible] coat. Everything about him was simple and inexpensive. Many people, myself after a time, thought perhaps he was a farmer. The day was very cold, and he had evidently dressed for the occasion. The man was Mr. Bonner, the famous publisher of the Ledger. Mr. Bonner was quite deaf to the whistle of the locomotive, and he had to be quite close to it before he was aroused to a sense of his danger. He has a fine head, well-balanced, and has the general appearance of a man of great [illegible]. He looks like a man who would be quick in a crisis, and who would be cool and collected in the face of danger. A man who could have been in the Dutch Reformed church and has been in Apache country.

"He was the man in America who developed a good to be by means of pointers [illegible] a 'special' of a country newspaper [illegible] Albany, [illegible] that [illegible] is as good today as when first it appeared. He was Barnum's Bonner. When a boy I set type in his office. He was then as determined, energetic and aggressive in man as he is today. Mr. Bonner's advertising method was not a good one, but it was a strong one. It was a meteor in a clear sky for an indefinite period. Before it appeared the [illegible] were [illegible] and interest. People wanted to know where it came from and what it was. They bought it simply to see it, and to see what it would do next. Bonner's success became its source and Mr. Bonner's fortune became such. Bonner never repeated his unusual advertising, also waxed wealthy. [illegible] wagon in [illegible] painted by the wayside for the novelty of the advertising display was soon gone.

Mr. Bonner spends from four to five hours a day in his sanctum. It is an old little room. Everything seems to be in confusion. The chairs are full of piles of old newspapers, and books and magazines are scattered in every corner. Engravings and photographs, recalling the triumphs and friendships of past years, hang on the walls. Bones, models of boots, horseshoes and other oddities suggestive of a love of equine speed are in the room. The old rolltop desk is a litter of letters and newspaper clippings. Horace Greeley's old Tribune table was never in a worse condition. Nobody but Mr. Bonner himself, however, touches anything in the room. If he wants any special article he fishes among the litter at a given spot until he finds it. A good sized safe squats at one end of the room. It is piled with curiosities that have a value peculiarly delightful to Mr. Bonner alone. For instance, it contains the gold watch that marked Dexter's first wonderful time. The independent second hand remains on the fraction of a second as the catch was sprung, and has never been thrown back to the hour since the horse flashed under the string. Near this watch rests a second chronometer, marking the time of Pocahontas, and a third recalling the unrivaled achievement of the peerless Maud S. How many other souvenirs of the glories past the safe hides from public view Mr. Bonner alone can tell.

PAID LARGE SALARIES.

The wonderful sums paid to Edward Everett, Henry Ward Beecher and Fanny [illegible] made public. These were by no means the only writers to whom Mr. Bonner paid large salaries. Oliver Dyer, a stenographer, for years edited the correspondents' column at $35 a week. After a decade of this drudgery he wrote an article for Packard's Monthly entitled "The Wickedest Man in New York." He awoke the next morning and found himself famous. Within a year Charles A. Dana was paying him $100 a week for special reports on The Sun. Mr. Bonner opened his eyes. "Here, Oliver," he said one afternoon, "if you're worth $100 a week to men outside The Ledger office, you're certainly worth that money to the men inside of it. Stick to your 'Answers to Correspondents' hereafter, and draw your $100 a week." From that day to the present the editor has retained his easy berth.

Mr. Bonner is not only a keen literary critic, but he is an astute judge of men. His knowledge of human nature seems intuitive. His judgment is quick and decisive. He knows what he wants and he pays handsomely for it. Nevertheless you can't fool him. He knows what he does not want. He trimmed his salaries and told his newspaper counsel that if they did not like it he would shut it down. Then without pause or making a kick. His contributors are never at the service of his friends. He refuses to grant even the most commonplace of favors. Small cash appeals he is adamant. He frequently steels himself against his own sympathies in serving friends if to refuse such requests.

Between 3 and 4 p. m. Mr. Bonner sets his waste paper basket, pulls on his overshoes, descends the stairs and trudges homeward. He walks over to the Park place elevated station and rides to Fifty-eighth street. He lives on this street, within 200 feet of Fifth avenue. The house is a plain brown stone front four stories high, and without any extra trimmings. It is substantially but not handsomely furnished. Bookcases are not only filled, but volumes are piled upon the parlor tables without regard to order. Bonner is a plain matter of fact home man. He has no box at the opera and I never saw him at a theatre. He gives no social entertainments.—New York Cor. Pioneer Press.

Jordan Water for the Royal Baptism.

A curious offer was made the other day by a lady who recently returned from traveling in Palestine. She had brought back with her a big bottle of the water of the river Jordan, which she sent to Windsor with a note offering it for the baptism of Princess Beatrice. The princess accepted the gift and sent the donor an autograph letter of thanks.—Liverpool Courier.

His business shall be to collect information upon the subject of labor, the relation to capital, the hours of labor, the rate of wages, the cost of production of the articles produced, the earnings of the laboring men and women, the means of improving their material, social, intellectual, and moral prosperity, and and the best means of protecting life and preventing accidents in mines, workshops, factories, and other places of industry.

The Secretary of Agriculture is empowered by the bill just passed, to inquire into the causes of discontent which may exist between employers and employes within the United States and he may invite and hear sworn statements from both such parties concerning matters in controversy.

Another important step has been taken in the Permanent Exposition movements. The Senatorial committee on this subject have reported in favor of commemorating the great Constitutional Centennial in 1889, and very properly Washington has been selected as the place for holding it. The committee has not yet reported upon the manner of the proposed celebration, or in regard to the Quadri Centennial of 1892, but the action now taken furnishes sufficient assurance that the entire programme as contemplated by the Board of Promotion and including its exposition features, will receive the indorsement of Congress.

There are a number of absentees from the Senate Chamber during these exciting days of Senatorial contests. Senators Conger and McMillan have not returned from their fruitless errands to secure resolution. Senator Sewell is at New Jersey's capital looking after his fences. Senators Miller and Van Wyck are in New York, and Nebraska respectively, looking after their interests. Senators Voorhees and Harrison are in Indianapolis' marshaling the immense forces and Senator Maxey went to Texas in pursuit of Congressman Reagan. The race of these rivals caused some amusement.

Senator Maxey heard of Mr. Reagan's departure about twenty minutes after the latter's train stopped away from the station, and immediately ordered his trunk and engaged sleeping car accomodation to Austin. Mr. Reagan had about those hours the start, but as he took the Virginia Midland and Senator Maxey the St. Louis route, it became not only a race for the senatorship, but a lively race as well, to see which would be the first to enter the Legislature on opening day.

The House of Representatives was taken stand up over the Anti-polygamy bill. When it came up for consideration on Wednesday, the delegate from Utah, Mr. Lane, took the floor in a long speech which commanded the closest attention. He said the measure was unconstitutional, un-American and wantonly destructive of human rights that it set at naught the immutable principles upon which the constitutional rights of man were founded, and that all the Mormons and their church were to insatiable Spoilers. Delegate Lane attracted the whole House attention and excited the interest of the galleries during his spirited defense of the Salt Lake hierarchy.

There was a good deal of difference of opinion among Members touching the constitutionality of some features of the Mormon bill. It proposes to extinguish what is known as the Mormon church and scatter or divide its property among those who do not believe in its tenets or practice. Some Members argued that the Constitution which prohibits the establishment of any church or religious belief by organic act, was violated by such legislation. Others argued that it was scarcely to be said that the Mormon Church, as such, was in actual open, a land be here [illegible] for the purpose of [illegible] to the people of the United States, and which [illegible]

Frank Hoke of North Adrian spent Saturday with his brother, C. M. Hoke.

Mrs. Jim Pocklington was under the doctor's care last week.

Chas. Culbertson's children are on the sick list at present.

We are sorry to lose our neighbor, Peter Swick and family in a few weeks, he having bought an 80 farm 2 miles north east of the village of Milan.

The editor of the "Tecumseh" News, Chas. Field was in the village Monday evening on business.

Allie Amer spent Sunday as the guest of Andrew Cheever at Britton.

On Thursday evening of last week, upwards of 75 of the friends in the village and vicinity, took possession of the home of Chas. Gripton and family in the way of a surprise. After the host had recovered from his embarrassing position, the ladies passed hot coffee and doughnuts, after which, all joined in a social chat and visit and not until a late hour was home thought of, when all departed, having enjoyed a pleasant evening.

Two large sleigh loads of the friends of Elder James Wright, attended the donation at Britton last week Wednesday night, and report a fine time.

The L. C. S. will be held this week, Friday evening, at the home of Mrs. J. F. Temple. A short literary program will be presented. Mrs. Temple desires a large attendance and all who wish to enjoy a pleasant evening should be present.

A letter received from Jay Santus, last week, reveals to us the fact that he is in Sorento, Florida. Would not wonder if he was in search of orange blossoms. If it proves successful to him, why not some of us follow suit?

Mrs. Mary C. Wood, of Tecumseh, President of the Lenawee Co. W. C. T. U., will furnish an essay, entitled, "The relation of the church to the liquor traffic," at the public entertainment given at Cottage Hall, next Tuesday night, Feb. 1st, by the W. C. T. U. All who have read Mrs. Wood's poem in the Herald a few weeks since, written for the Fourth Quinquennial reunion of the Raisin Valley Seminary, will know that her essay will be very interesting and instructive. A large turnout is desired by the ladies of the Union.

Through the kindness of our friend, we send for publication a few extracts of a letter received from an old acquintance, to the most of you, Lewis VanVleet, 194 twelfth st. Portland, Oregon, written Jan. 9th, '87. He reports a lively winter thus far, having had no snow and but very little frost, and the only ice has been artificial. The flowers are blooming in the open air yet, with nothing to protect them. The times being pretty good. Wheat is worth 72c.; Oats, 45c.; Potatoes, 54c.; Apples from 50c. to 75c. per box, 50 lbs. in a box. Hay, $15.00 per ton; Pork, dressed, $4 & 4½; Beef, 6c.; good Mutton Sheep, 2½c. @ 3c., on foot. NORTH EAST FRANKLIN.

[illegible] Allen for J. E. M[illegible]

[illegible] Charley Hampton, an old Franklin boy, has been visiting his relatives here for a few days. He left on Monday for his home in Nebraska.

[illegible] Will Spalding was quite sick last week and had to dismiss his school. He returned to his duties on Monday.

The Franklin Union Literary and Lyceum met at the house of Wm. E. Wisner Jan. 26. Although the roads were exceedingly bad the attendance was larger.

House called to order by the newly elected president, J. S. Allen, at 7 o'clock. Minutes read by the secretary, Mrs. E. S. Munger, and approved. After hearing and dismissing the usual committees and appointing new ones, the question of how to get through with the exercises earlier in the evening came up, the society having outgrown its former seasonable hours of 8 and 10 o'clock. It was suggested that we divide the exercises and alternate them, having the literary exercises, music, &c., one evening, and query box, debate &c., the next society evening. After some discussion it was put to vote and carried. It was also, on motion carried, that we meet weekly in future. Motion that we meet at the house of Bert Billington, Jan. 27, prevailed. After a song by Mrs. Allen Wells, the first part of the evenings exercises, consisting of recitations, declamations, select reading, dialogues, instrumental music, were performed, the usual attention and good order prevailing throughout. After a few minutes recess, the house was again called to order—chairman of debate appointed and judges chosen. At this point, some one came in with the startling information that it was raining. The house at once moved to adjourn. At our next meeting, we shall discuss the question "Resolved, That science has done more to benefit and enlighten the world than the Christian religion." Leading disputants—Owen Wisner, Aff. Mrs. Smith, Munger, Neg. We missed Wm. E. Spaulding's genial smile and were sorry to learn that he was seriously indisposed.

ONSTED ODDS.

Look out for Orange blossoms next week.

Fred Onsted is on the on the sick list.

Mrs. H. Kishpaugh is quite sick.

Mrs. Castle, formerly Miss Phebe Smith, is visiting Calvin Daniels.

E. A. Taylor entertained friends from Napoleon Friday and Saturday.

Mason & Daniels are so busy that they run their feed mill nights, part of the time.

Mr. O. F. Daniels, of Tipton, was snow bound at R. L. Glenn's several days.

The donation held a week or two since, at James Newton's was a success both financially and socially. About eighty were present and were well entertained. The proceeds went to Rev. O. F. Winton.

Eugene Kinney has purchased of Albert Farnsworth, an interest in the feed mill at Leon's corners and the firm is known as Howard & Kinney.

R. L. Glenn is building an ice house. He expects to put up ice enough to have some to sell.

Little Aubrey has been very sick with inflamation of the lungs, but is on the gain now.

The Rev. Mr. Morey exchanged pulpits with the Rev. Mr. Jackson, of Dover, last Sabbath.

Hon. A. Verder, cut a last Saturday night. He returned to Indiana Monday, where he has a lucrative job.

Mrs. E. A. Taylor fell from a pump on which she was standing in the rain for last Saturday, striking against the chime of a barrel with such force as to break several ribs. She is reported as doing as well as could be expected.

The donation of the benefit of Mrs. Russ, last Tuesday evening, was well attended and was a success financially. After the donation a subscription paper was started to raise money with which to pay off a small mortgage on her house. U. S. Burchan took it in charge and we hear that he succeeded in raising the desired amount.

Albert. Your inquiry reveals that you are a young married man. All women have a soft part, and it is relegated by scientists that they enjoy having them.

[illegible] RIDGE ITEMS.

[illegible] Phila on last Thursday evening.

Mrs. Ella Wheeler and Rose [illegible] left Ridge on the stage Saturday from the [illegible] being frozen and a team driving up behind. The horse ran 40 or 50 rods, turned around and walked back as though nothing had happened. It was [illegible] lucky. Eastlick steered.

Our mail is very uncertain and irregular, coming about half of the time.

W. K. Sexton, of Howell, Mich. called on A. Eastlick last week Tuesday and bought a car load of tile which were shipped from Ridgeway this week Monday.

Marilla Pilbeam is quite sick at F. W. Yates'.

Irve Sisson died Monday the 17th, of inflamation of the lungs, aged about 24 years.

Thomas B. Gould, one of our oldest pioneers, died Tuesday the 18th, of Bright's disease, aged 76 years.

"Mart" Bailey writes from Mason, Finney county, Kansas, that he is now stopping with Chas. Latleur and Clarence Baker, on the open prairie 35 miles from a railroad, 15 miles from a postoffice, 10 miles from the sand hills on the south, 19 miles from same on the north, 10 miles from a stream of water, where wells average 225 feet deep, and not a tree or bush for many miles. Sod houses are the rule, with an occasional dugout which resembles a potatoe pit from outside appearance. The weather changes are equal to Mich., with stronger winds—60° above at noon and 6° below next morning. He says the sand hills are the poorest land he ever saw while the prairie lands are the nicest, the soil of which is black sand and loam with clay subsoil. He expects to purchase buying 160 acres.

We met "Hud" Conklin on the walk and inquired "how is business?" "Pretty dull." "What's the trouble?" "Well we can't get any coal and are about out of dry wood." "What causes such a scarcity of coal." "So many strikes. Why don't you petition congress to increase the tariff and offer extra inducements to immigration, thereby raising the price of coal, enlarging the labor force, lowering wages and causing a greater number of strikes." "I can't see it."

BRITTON BUDGET

The pastor with his wife of the Christian Church, wish to express their thanks to the friends who so kindly and generously remembered their minister and family in a recent surprise visit, after a sumptuous and well provided dinner was enjoyed with much pleasantry from well filled baskets carried in, there was presented to Mrs. W. a purse raised among the ladies, which finally reached the sum of $7.67 and to the pastors home left $9.25. Occasionally a surprise reunion in the pastors family becomes indeed a pleasant affair as this was truly in the best sense of the term a surprise, to the parson's home and in number fifty persons. It does not hurt the parson's home to be visited upon in this way of a Britton surprise. Add fact it was still exceedingly pleasant upon last Wednesday evening to find so many friends present at the basement chapel, to give to their pastor their generous donation of $8.00 in cash, received. "Praise God from whom all blessings flow." Our sincere thanks to you. Very respectfully, James & Mary A. Wright.

George Gilbert Press is much as expected.

Joe Hunter bought a lot of John Cheever which he is going to build a house in the spring.

Fred Fox has [illegible] on a [illegible] has been braking on the P. & A. for some time.

Herbert Crapshaw has gone to Detroit where he has a situation as book keeper in an insurance office.

A good many went from here to attend the funeral of Burton Oesterle at Wayne.

Hustful Miller cut his foot quite bad with an ax the other day while splitting wood which will be likely to lay him up for some time.

Will Vanderhousen caught the mail Friday, while they were away but was discovered before it got under headway, it burned a hole in the floor about 1 foot square, supposed to have caught from the stove.

[illegible] SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSONS.

[illegible] Mr. [illegible] have dug up [illegible] which have on them [illegible] Harar [illegible] far to go from Gerar to Palestine one would have to go nearly north to escape the desert and then southwest. From this hundred.—Terah had now died and he was head of the class. To leave before his father died would have been against all the Eastern ideas of good days. In thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed.—This is a remarkable prophecy, and is fulfilled only in Christ. Before Christ the Jews were a peculiarly secluded people in their religion.

Sarai, his wife.—Also his half sister. This shows how undeveloped was the moral sense of that day on social matters. To marry one's father's daughter was allowable, but not one's mother's. The Mosaic law forbade such unions.—Their substance.—Their immense herds and flocks belonging to the tribe.—The souls they had gotten.—Not exactly slaves, but persons attached to the tribe, bondsmen, etc., who acknowledged Abram as their head.—Canaan.—The oldest name for that part of Palestine west of the Jordan.—The place of Shechem.—The word place suggests here a place of worship, a high place. Shechem is the well known town now called Nablous near Mount Gerizim.—Oak of Moreh.—A famous tree or grove, probably attached to the place of worship.

"An altar unto the Lord."—Probably near altars erected previously to other gods.—"Mountain on the east of Bethel."—An elevated place for protection.—"Toward the South."—The word for "South" in the Hebrew is Negeb, which was the name for the [illegible]

Instruction.—Abram's call is a very common one. God has many a young man, or woman now to leave his home and start another. It may be a change caused by distress of marriage, but anywayer the entrance of the child be only God's call. Do not go except with God's blessing.

We cannot all found great communities, as did Abram and our Pilgrim fathers or those who are pioneers of the West but we can all have his blessing whether we move into a new place or whether we remain. No greater comfort can a person have than that. And no greater aim, to be a blessing to people about us.

We cannot tell how far an influence may extend and descend. It must be paid, and it must continue from generation to generation.

It is a good old law of God, that those who bless will be blessed, and those who curse, will be cursed. We say that "curses come home to roost." One who does good to others therein does good to himself; one who injures others injures himself.

When we comes into the Company of the Church, he might as well take with him all the substance he has gotten, and this society has wealth as well as his sojourn. "With my substance," says the hymn, "I will honor My Creator and Lay King."

What Abram started to do he did. The story says that "they went forth to go into the land of Canaan and into the land of Canaan they came." That is better than Pooh-dah. The Sunnah Lad came in 1 of the Chaldees to land, but he went out as far as Haran. The story says Terah died in Haran. He did not get the full blessing because he stopped half way.

Wherever Abram went the first thing he did was to set up an altar. He put his religion first. Every place he should have his altar. A place of worship is the first thing in every community.

Wherever Abram was he was a stranger. He did not mix with the natives. He had nothing to do with the Canaanites in the village. There was a great difference between a Chaldee and a Canaanite. They have three. One is travelling up and the other down. Let us associate with the good and not the wicked.

But the great lesson which the Bible draws from the story of Abram is faith. He believed God. He believed that it was safe to obey him. He would go where Him not knowing whither he went. Every one is to be interested about obeying God. It is safer even for kings as Christians than otherwise, especially near akin.

THE PARSELL THURSDAY JAN.

The Utica Observer is responsible for this thinnest of all jokes. Mr. Dow is the son of an early and old settler and pioneer Senatorship.

Ex President Andrew D. White of Cornell has presented to that institution his collection of historical works, numbering over thirty thousand volumes and valued at something more than $[illegible].

A good many young people in Lansing just at present are trying to describe the sensations produced by tobogganing. The sensation which stays on a fellow the longest, however, is the stiffness of limb induced by carrying the toboggan, the girl, and the hand-painted occasion something like half a mile the wrong way of the stairs.—Lansing Republican.

The Pittsburg Dispatch says: While comments are heard about the Confederate brigadiers in Congress, the unanimity with which the Republican legislature are sending such peaceable civilians as Farwell, Sawyer, Stockbridge and Stewart to the Senate seems to indicate that they are not going to make themselves liable to the imputation of packing that body with Union veterans.

The Baltimore & Ohio Company has taken a step which is to be commended. At Newark, Ohio, Thursday, the pay car distributed about $50,000 to employees, and while this was being done a temperance pledge was presented for each of them to sign, promising to abstain from the use of liquor, opiates, and especially while on duty, and any who refuse to sign this are forced to quit the service. This is the outgrowth of the Republic horror which is attributed to the use of liquor.

If the nomination of Mathews is rejected the President should nominate another capable and reputable colored man for the place and continue to nominate colored men as long as the Senate continues to reject, placing the responsibility for maintaining the color line in official circles entirely upon the latter body. The issue should be made so clear that the most ignorant colored man in the country shall understand that it is a Republican Senate and not a Democratic President that is barring the way to the political advancement of the colored race.—Philadelphia Times.

Here is the latest pumpkin story, taken from the Santa Maria (Cal.) Times: One day this week when Mr. Shuman, who resides a few miles west of town on the Guadaloupe road, was gathering his pumpkins, he placed one on the wagon from which he noticed bees issuing. Examination revealed the fact that the interior of the pumpkin was full of honey; in fact, it was a veritable bee hive. The bees had gained access through a crack in one side of the vegetable and had taken up permanent quarters. Mr. Shuman took out eight pounds of honey. Is there any other land under the sun where the farmer can raise his own pumpkins and honey on the same vine?

The Columbus Journal suggests an amendment to the constitution, providing that Congress shall assemble within a short time after election. This is an exceedingly sensible suggestion. An election is in effect an appeal to the country and the verdict is generally an approval of some definite policy. The sooner the new Congress can adopt measures which the people have in reality suggested by their votes the better for the country. Just now the general desire is for a reduction of taxation, and it is believed the Congress elect is committed to that idea, but it will not convene until thirteen months from election have elapsed. The old Congress feels more responsibility on account of the recent elections and many members whose terms expire with the present session are either indifferent or do not care to carry out the will of the people as expressed. A new Congress, fresh from the people, would act promptly, intelligently, and in many instances much better than an entirely new one. This policy of early assembling after election prevails in every State in the matter of home legislatures, and there is no good reason why the national legislature should not also take up its work fresh from the people, quickly following an election.

OUR LANSING LETTER.

LANSING, JAN. 23, 1887.

Friday evening, the 14th, the legislature adjourned until the following Monday evening, when the absent state solons returned to the city and resumed business at the old stand. As very few are [illegible] passes, a sign of railroad jets as very few of them remained at the capital after adjournment. The passes issued of passes has a tendency to shorten the working week of the legislature at both ends without any noticeable loss. [illegible] go home Saturday and return Monday, thus [illegible] this session as the start of a [illegible] stocking through the sand, the members who indulge in this way [illegible] also will save the state a [illegible] for every such excursion. At least one [illegible] adjourn by telegraph.

[illegible] taking a day's present, holding only afternoon sessions. Among the more important business thus far transacted by the senate was the introduction of a bill by Mr. Wisner to create a superior court for East Saginaw, and a bill by Mr. Seymour to establish a prison for infamy for the confinement of the polygamists exclusively, for which an appropriation of $[illegible] will be asked.

In the house there was introduced a bill providing for capital punishment for murder and rape. Representative Vicquin gave notice that he would introduce a bill to do away with the superior court of Detroit, and a bill to [illegible] the board of [illegible] of the same city. The same member also introduced a bill to exempt from garnishment the wages of all heads of families. Mr. Ogg gave notice of the introduction of a bill to prohibit the payment of employes with scrip or store orders, the bill also providing for the payment to employes of their wages at least once in two weeks. Mr. Hosford introduced a land grant forfeiture bill; also a bill making an appropriation to carry out and complete the capitol decorations. A bill was introduced requiring a civil license in order to marry legally; a bill making an appropriation for the support, equipment and expenses of a state weather service; a bill to prevent swindling in promissory notes, and notice was given by Mr. Grannell of a bill to prevent the manufacture of adulterated candy, and a bill to repeal the law exempting church property from taxation. The petition of Henry Chamberlain praying that Gov. Luce be impeached was referred to the judiciary committee.

Directly after the routine business in the house Thursday morning Representative Chapman moved to suspend the rules and put the resolution to submit a prohibitory amendment on its immediate passage. The motion prevailed, and a call of the house recorded 72 "ayes" and 21 "noes." Nine Fusion members voted with the Republicans, and one of the latter, Bettinger, of Detroit, recorded his vote against the resolution. The same afternoon the resolution was laid before the senate and by that body referred to the committee on liquor traffic. It is probable the senate will take action on the resolution this week.

In a previous letter I made reference to the new political party now in process of incubation, which, when fairly under headway, is expected to make this mundane sphere vibrate from center to circumference. John M. Potter, of this city, is one of an executive committee of 14 appointed last September at Indianapolis to carry on the work of organization. He was named as organizer for the states of Michigan, California and Oregon. The last two states are undergoing manipulation by substitutes commissioned by Mr. Potter, and Michigan will be brought into line at a mass conference to be held at Flint Feb. 9, to perfect plans of organization and appoint one delegate from each congressional district to the convention at Cincinnati Feb. 22. The architects of this scheme which is to fever the political world expect to bring things to such a white heat at Cincinnati that they will be able to weld into a harmonious combination all Knights of Labor, Greenbacks, Trades Union Soldier, Grange and cognate organizations. If they don't do so they won't have lost anything; if they do the leaders of the old parties are expected to order their pension robes without further ado.

It is likely that Representative Hosford's bill providing that railway corporations shall restore to the public domain all unsold lands granted them by the government, after ten years, will create something of a stir. The passage of the bill will be advocated by strong petitions and an influential lobby. Mr. Hosford is one of the [illegible] Labor members who believe their constituents expect them to do something before the bill will receive favorable consideration upon which the [illegible] labor organizations and Mr. Hosford himself will be brought prominently to the front.

It is expected the house will send a special message to the senate [illegible] making that an appropriation [illegible] made to enable the state to take her proper place in the centennial celebration of the signing of the ordinance [illegible] territory was formed. Don C. Henderson is interesting himself and others in the matter.

Wednesday afternoon, the 19th, in [illegible] committee upon the death of Hon. Orrel N. Case, of Wayne, became the special order. The resolutions were read by the clerk and unanimously adopted. Feeling resolutions were delivered by Messrs. Hosford, [illegible] and Grannell. The report of the committee relative to paying the wives of the deceased members [illegible] was also adopted. A [illegible] upon portraits of the deceased members [illegible] company the [illegible]

[illegible] regulating the sale of oleomargarine is liable to become law. It provides that not only signs bearing the words "Oleomargarine Sold Here," or "Butterine Sold Here," as the case may be, shall be placed conspicuously over the doorway to and in the centre of rooms where these articles are sold, but [illegible] provides that such signs bearing the words "Oleomargarine Sold Here," "Butterine Sold Here," etc., shall be hung in the center of dining rooms of hotels and boarding houses where these "counterfeit presentments" are supplied. I suppose the granger members expect these signs will strike terror to the hearts of those who come in conflict with them and cause a greater demand for the genuine article.

The consideration of the submission resolution in the senate was postponed until Thursday, Jan. 27, in deference to the wishes of Senator Hubbell, who was compelled to go to Chicago. At that time it is thought it will pass. During the past few days a stronger sentiment has been manifested in favor of its passage.

At a meeting of the Prohibition state central committee in this city last week the proposed constitutional amendment was thoroughly discussed, the decision reached being that they would accept the situation, and in the event of the passage of the resolution do all in their power to insure the success of the amendment at the polls. A provisional committee was appointed to act in conjunction with the temperance people of the state in case of submission.

The bill noticed in the house by Representative Ogg to abolish prison contracts is the natural outcome of the constant agitation which that matter has been receiving for the past few years. Two years ago a similar bill was passed by both houses but was vetoed by the governor. It is expected, however, that that will not be the fate of the bill this time. Labor Commissioner Pond, who is interested in the success of the bill, will do all he can to secure its passage and the signature of the governor.

The Century for February.

The variety in the contents of the current Century is not less noticeable than the geographical distribution of their origin. In subjects and contributors all sections of the country are represented, and appeal is made to many tastes. Politics, biography, travel, fiction of four kinds, art, architecture, astronomy, public questions, war reminiscences, unwritten history, poetry, and humor furnish topics of vital and present interest. The drawings, by Winslow Homer, Pennell, Blum, Kemble, Alexander, the beautifully printed engravings of astronomical subjects, including a novel one of "A Flash of Lightning" from a photograph, the reproductions of the newly discovered Roman bronze statues, and the portraits of American statesmen and divines, show no willingness to accommodate the excellence of the pictures to the excellence of the text.

The life of Lincoln, by Hay and Nicolay, is occupied with Lincoln's first term in Congress and his life as a lawyer, this installment concluding the first portion of the biography and carrying its subject to his fortieth year. His campaign for Congress, his opposition speech in the House, his bill to abolish slavery in the District of Columbia, his attitude toward appointments to office, and his characteristics as a lawyer are part of the February chapters. The responsibility for the Mexican war is discussed, and pictures are given of Western life in 1840, and vivid character sketches of Peter Cartwright, Col. E. D. Baker, and others. The engraved portraits include Presidents Van Buren, Tyler, Polk, and Harrison, Gen. John J. Hardin, Baker, Calhoun, Douglas and Webster, Davis, Col. Marion Digby Wright, and Joshua R. Giddings.

Excitement in Texas.

Great excitement has been caused in the vicinity of Paris, Tex., by the remarkable recovery of Mr. J. E. Corley, who was so helpless he could not turn in bed or raise his head; everybody said he was dying of Consumption. A trial bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery was sent him. Finding relief, he bought a large bottle and a box of Dr. King's New Life Pills; by the time he had taken two boxes of Pills and two bottles of the Discovery, he was well and had gained in flesh thirty-six pounds.

Bill," the driver, as to have the box seat placed at his disposal. "Bill" said Thatcher [illegible] concern. The [illegible]

A trifling incident occurred at Pine Tree Crossing which did not escape Yuba Bill's admiration of the stranger. As Bill opened the double locked box on the front of the coach, secured to Wells Fargo & Co.'s express and the overland company's treasure—Mr. Wilks perceived a small, black satchel, of peculiar pattern among the parcels. "As you carry baggage there, I see," he said, [illegible] "Not often," responded Yuba Bill, shortly. "Why, this fine mountain air makes a man hungry! I know that man whose seat it is," said Yuba Bill, who, for insulting purposes of his own, preferred to establish the fiction that Wilks was an interloper, and if he rockaway, in a sorter mixed kempsey like this, to fork up his portmanteau, I don't know who's business it is. Who?" continued Bill, lashing himself into a simulated rage, "who in blank is coming this way from?" [illegible] sittin' up thar on the box seat, you are. Mebbe you think you kin see round corners with that thar eye and kin pull on for beans round corners on down grades a mile ahead but here, Thatcher, who with something of Lancelot's concern for Mordred, had no sympathy for all information intended so generally that Yuba Bill stopped.

On the fourth day there struck a blinding snow storm while ascending the dreary plateau that helped forward for 400 miles was to be their deadliest. Nevertheless, after doubling through the drifts, gave our despairing on reaching the next station and the prospects ahead, to all but the experienced eye, looked dismal enough. A few passengers advised return to Reno, others a postponement of the journey until the weather changed. Yuba Bill alone was for pressing forward as they were. "Two miles more and we're on the right grade, where the wind is strong enough to blow a man through the windy and just heavy enough to blow away over them cliffs every inch of snow that falls. I'll just skirmish round in and out of them drifts on these four wheels while ye can't drag one of them dead-beat and dry goods boxes through a drift. But hark ye, gentlemen, shipping nothing for a hedge—that the wind warmly accepted by Thatcher, who had the next best thing to experience, the instinct that taught him to read character, and take advantage of another man's experience. "The driver wants to stay with his coach," said Bill, authoritatively, "and the coach belongs to the company. Leastways, as many as wants to take a hedge can do so, and there's room in the barn. Those as wants to go on will come and the rest will come on." Mr. Wilks selected the hedge and adviser, a few remained for the next stage, and Thatcher, with two others, decided to accompany Yuba Bill. These changes took up some valuable time, and the storm continuing, the stage was run into the shed the passengers, following around the station fire, or bar, until after midnight, when Yuba Bill put in the relays. "I wish you a good journey," said Wilks, as he drove to the shed as Bill entered. Bill vouchsafed no reply, but, addressing himself to the driver, said curtly, as if giving an order for the delivery of goods, "Shovel down at Fiddlings and put a extra pair of mules on the box. Kick [illegible] and shove along!" Yuba Bill took the reins, which instantly all but the driver's disappeared, and the coach was soon [illegible] hand. Further on, a mile or so, [illegible] ing from a bowlder to the other, [illegible] across their path to the height of [illegible] roof. But Yuba Bill dashed [illegible] it and to shield the [illegible] past. But even as the [illegible] was passed, the coach disappeared with an [illegible]

The State Equal Suffrage Association was held in the Capitol building on the 19th, President Lucy [illegible] in the chair. The first session, on Thursday afternoon, was devoted to reading the reports of the various officers, which showed a good deal of work done during the year. Mrs. Rockwood read a paper on "Woman's Work in Reform," which was followed by a discussion by Mrs. [illegible] and others. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Lucy [illegible]; Corresponding Secretary, Fannie H. The distinguished Susan B. Anthony spoke Friday evening in Representatives' hall to a crowded house of eager listeners for municipal suffrage. The speaker was introduced in a few appropriate words by Governor Luce, who occupied the platform with Mary L. Doe, President. Great interest was shown throughout the convention.

Persons seeking information concerning suffrage work or organization can address FANNIE H. FOWLER, Corresponding Secretary, Manistee.

FARMERS SOCIAL CLUB

Friday evening last the Farmers Social club met at John Schroeder's. Their spacious rooms were filled to overflowing with an interested crowd. The meetings this winter have all been interesting, but none more so than any previous one. The literary part of the program was carried out by the young people, with the exception of the song by Mary Strong.

The Fisher family displayed of the [illegible] talent.

Miss Emma Schroeder introduced the [illegible] with an excellent paper, and [illegible] showed skill in papers by Will [illegible], Ella Fisher and [illegible]. Wallace Frank Hall and Clem [illegible] had the papers but gave their ideas of the question in a plain [illegible].

All agreed that farmers' sons and daughters should receive, and they thought were receiving a liberal education.

Frank Hall urged the farmer's sons and daughters to avoid the extreme of making their education the means of shirking farming or the toil thereof instead, but take their education with them on the farm and make it adorn the profession. After the young people had finished, remarks were made by some of the older ones, including some from our visiting guests.

The club will meet at John Fisher's Feb. 9th, evening. Feb. 16th:

A SURPRISE.

TIPTON, Jan. 24, '87.

Any one passing the Congregational church last Thursday evening, Jan. 20th, about 7:30 P. M., might have seen a faint light in the vestibule, then a few moments later a small company proceeded from the church to the parsonage, where they were met by the pastor. It being dark, he could see but one or two at a time, and he was much surprised as one after another of the young ladies and gentlemen of his church came out of the darkness into the cheerful light of his home. These young people are members of Mrs. Keeney's and Mr. Alexander's bible classes, and they having been taught from their youth that "it is more blessed to give than to receive," thought to put it to a practical test. The result was that they presented Mr. and Mrs. Putnam with a beautiful hanging lamp. The pastor responded with much feeling, expressing their appreciation, not only of the gift, but of the kindly feeling which prompted it. The remainder of the evening was spent in a very enjoyable manner, they were so well entertained that the hour was late before the company departed for their homes.

A FEW WORDS ABOUT BUTTER.

TECUMSEH, Jan. 29, 1887.

MR. EDITOR:—Having an order for butter of the firm of Turpen & Harris, Union City, Ind., I purchased about 20,000 pounds of fresh roll butter of different firms in Lenawee and Jackson counties, and shipped the same to them. Then concluded to take a trip there and see how they liked Michigan butter, and visit the factory. Last Saturday I left on the morning express for Toledo, arriving at my destination about 7 P. M. Found Mr. Harris waiting for me. Spent the Sabbath with him. Monday I visited the great butter factory, where they are working over from 25,000 to 40,000 pounds of fresh, roll butter daily. About forty men are employed at the work. He has the best improved machinery and runs it by steam power. Butter is purchased in seven different states and shipped to this factory. He has also connected with this business in another part of the city, a poultry establishment, where he has handled since Nov. 1st, 1886, 650,000 pounds of poultry, dry picked. He has shipped this winter 15,000 barrels of eggs, that he held in cold storage. When passing through Lima, O., I could see about two hundred derricks. On inquiry I learned they were boring for oil, had two hundred wells down at a depth of 2500 feet, and not a dry one, so far. One well is flowing a thousand barrels a day. A derrick, tank and boring for one well are let at jobs for $1500 each. Crude oil was worth 75c a bbl at the refinery. It makes business for that place. I am now at home and ready to purchase 10,000 pounds of fresh roll butter.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[illegible]

WASHINGTON, D.C., Jan. 25, '87.

Congress began the week with some sweeping pension legislation. Its attention was then turned to matters of local interest. Appropriation bills, miscellaneous business, and the discussion of the bill for establishing Agricultural Experiment stations, became [illegible] for a day over the question of investigating the management of the Interstate Commerce bill. The House finally settled down to debate over the Interstate Commerce bill, while the Senate passed [illegible].

When the Fiftieth met a special committee was appointed to report a suitable action to be taken for celebrating the centennial of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, he was careful not to commit himself to any special time or locality. He hoped that in a spirit of patriotic co-operation, rather than of local competition, Congress would proceed, etc. But the committee of seven Senators, who had the the audacity to declare that Washington was the suitable place for holding this celebration, have come in for a large share of criticism from rival cities.

Washington is the only city where every American is at home, and in which he feels the pride of an American citizen's ownership, and the question will be given to Washington without a doubt. It will last from 89 to 92.

There need not be a continuous rush, a feast and carnival for three years, as there would be over a public affair of this kind in a great commercial metropolis. Washington is not that kind of a city. It cultivates tranquility of deportment, and has sufficient breathing space to enjoy everything in a quiet way. It is used to crowds and gatherings of all kinds, as indeed it ought to be, for six National conventions are being held here during the present week.

Some members of congress have said that the principal object of the Government in the Pacific Railroad matter, was to get what was owing to it. Of course it is desirable to save $200,000,000, or as much of it as can be recovered, from those who have no right to it, but a number of men in both branches of Congress feel that the main thing to be attained is the moral effect of rebuking corruption. The Government can afford to lose the money, but it cannot afford to agree to a theft, if such there has been. The desire to investigate the management of the Pacific Railroads is not, therefore, born of a spirit of persecution, it is simply the duty of Congress to go to the bottom of this matter.

Although the Senate voted to pension the widow of Senator Logan at $2,000 a year, the bill has come to grief in the House Committee on pensions. Mrs. Logan would cost the Government eventually half a million by encouraging every widow whose husband had ever been in the army. But it appears that the fund provided for Mrs. Logan by the friends and admirers of her husband has now reached $70,000, with a prospect of rising to $100,000, and this will obviate all necessity of straining pension precedents so as to provide for her by act of Congress. The citizens of Chicago have also contributed $13,000 for the payment of encumbrances upon the home of Mrs. Logan in this city. The notes have all been paid off in the past few days, and Mrs. Logan now owns the house known as Calumet Place in her own right.

The bill passed by the House, pensioning dependent soldiers and sailors, who were not disabled in the service, but who are now too old and feeble to work, and also pensioning the dependent parents of soldiers and sailors, has frightened those who are opposed to pensioning everybody who ever had anything to do with a war. They fear Congress will next undertake to pension life-long noncombatants who have incurred physical or mental disability in writing war articles for the papers and magazines. The above mentioned bill applied to veterans of any war, Seminole, Black Hawk, Mexican war of the Rebellion and gives a uniform allowance of $12 a month from the time of the passage of the bill.

Then there is a proposition to pension Walt Whitman, which, it is claimed, would open the Treasury doors to any army of 50,000 new pensioners, claiming that they nursed some soldiers somewhere during the late war. They say if Walt Whitman ought to have $25.00 a month, Clara Barton ought to have $1,000 a year.

Washington society is extremely curious to see the light of the Cabinet, Mrs. Lemon, and its curiosity has increased with the last explosion, hence to postpone the period of their appearance. Several of the wives of the Cabinet have called to pay Mrs. Lamont, but she has [illegible] to a few select receptions which also [illegible] the residence. This [illegible] public glare. The wives of the other Cabinet officers tell the Secretary of the Treasury [illegible] his bride is a myth.

DIED.

GOULD.—Thomas Bradner Gould died Jan. 24, aged seventy-six years, eight months and twenty three days.

He was born in the town of Hadley, Seneca County, New York, April 25th, 1810, and moved to Michigan, in 1834. He located on the farm where he resided until his death. He changed his occupation in early manhood, and with the Free Baptist church, labor and economy was a farmer. He accumulated a good property. When he removed from Steuben County, N. Y., there were in the family, himself and wife, two horses, two cows, one ox, one yearling and a two horse wagon, and he kept a short visit on the way, they were six weeks in reaching Michigan. The subject of this article was married four times. His first wife was Miss Lucy Ann Ferris, who died in Lenawee County, leaving a husband and eight children. His second wife was Miss Lucy Ann Ferris, who died in Lenawee County, leaving a husband and eight children. His third wife was Miss Lucy Ann Ferris, who died in Lenawee County, leaving a husband and eight children. His fourth wife was Miss Lucy Ann Ferris, who died in Lenawee County, leaving a husband and eight children. His death chose its victim.

In death he left eight children, twenty-nine grand children and thirty one great grand children, in all being the father of eleven children, three dead, two by the first wife. All his children were born to him by the first and second wife.

His sickness had been about six months, which was from heart disease also Bright's disease, and though much of the time a sufferer, he was ambitious and kept going, until death came when, he said to those around him "I am in the arms of Jesus."

On Wednesday, as he died, on the following Tuesday, he was laid in his daughter near Adrian City, driving there and returning the same day. Thursday he went to Ridgeway. Friday he was at home with his children and Saturday went to Tecumseh. Thursday, the 20th, funeral services, conducted by the writer, from the Dutch Reformed church on the Ridge, assisted by Rev. A. J. Reed, of Illinois. Was buried in the cemetery near to said church.

Text, Philippians 1:21. "For to me to live is Christ, but to die is gain."

JAMES WRIGHT.

Hadley, Mich., Jan. 25th, 1887.

Entered into rest Monday morning Jan. 17th, Mrs. John Cummins, aged 87 years. She was born in England almost at the beginning of this century. She early united with the Methodist Episcopal church, was married to Mr. John Cummins in 1829, and removed to Tecumseh with her husband and son, 45 years ago. She lived an exemplary christian life and had strong faith in the promises of God during her early and active years.

But during the last number of years a shadow that came slowly, and grew darker and heavier, has rested upon her—her reason was clouded and in bewilderment and fear, the days and the nights have worn slowly away—she was tenderly watched over and cared for with the most untiring and unfailing patience. At the last when the Angel of Death was drawing near, the cloud was lifted, the darkness was all gone, and with an expression of perfect peace upon her face she said, "I know I am going to die now, but it is all right, I am going home," and so she fell asleep and we who knew her feel assured that when she awakened, she was satisfied, for she bore the likeness of her Saviour.

We rejoice that the weary years of her pilgrimage are ended and that she is safe at home within the golden walls of the Heavenly City.

THE LIBRARY BENEFIT

The Entertainment given at Mrs. Wm. Hayden's last Tuesday evening proved to be a very gratifying surprise. Every one expected a fine program, that is true, but the musical menu, as well as the attendance, surpassed the anticipations of all. The regular program consisted of ten selections with some "special sudden surprises" and other extras. A supply of camp chairs was provided and at eight o'clock Mrs. Hayden's parlors were crowded to overflowing. The program was announced by Mr. A. W. Mills, substantially as printed in the HERALD last week.

The selections were all finely given. Miss Mettler was favored with a hearty encore after her second solo, to which she responded very happily. At the conclusion of the literary and musical course, the company repaired to the kitchen to see L. P. Tribon and S. P. Hosmer stir up the wild animals. It was a very successful menagerie for one gotten up on short notice and added materially to the receipts of the evening. Candy and lemonade stands were provided, and these also were well patronized. The net receipts of the evening were $45.00. Right here we beg leave to offer a suggestion. Would it not be a good plan to get up a series of these entertainments? We can think of no plan, which, with so little outlay of time and money, will yield better financial results.

SPRINGVILLE SNUFF

M. A. Ladd was laid up a day or two this week on account of a piece of steel piercing his hand.

The last Missionary Social was held at the residence of Miss Mary J. Monagon.

One of the best debates of the season was participated in by the members of the Excelsior Association on Tuesday Eve. last. The question was woman suffrage and it was decided in favor of the negative. The next question is Resolved, that there is more pleasure in anticipation than participation.

The National Museum Co. have been holding the boards at the rink this week, presenting a ghost show. The company give an illustration of life in the far west, in Indian costumes, and includes four song and dance artists, an Apache girl, a ranger, and Texas, the cow boy fiddler. Although the notice is short they will make friends wherever they go. Advertisement of the entertainments.

The following wise suggestion is given by the Detroit Post and Tribune: Write or print your name and address and the contents of a package in the left hand corner of the wrapper. This will assure its immediate return to you for correction, if improperly addressed or insufficiently paid, and if it is not called for it can be returned to you without going to the dead letter office. If the patrons of the mail would do this, it would enable the department to restore at least ninety per cent of all undelivered mail matter. The letters would be returned free, and parcels upon payment of return postage.

GRANGE BLOSSOMS.

Although it was a cold wintry night outside last evening, within the hospitable parlors of Mr. Norton Gowdy orange blossoms reigned supreme. A large and pleasant company assembled to witness the marriage of his daughter LaVern to Mr. Thomas P. Earle. The nuptial knot was doubly tied, Rev. F. Adkins acted as the officiating clergyman, assisted by Rev. Frank S. Lyons, of Jefferson, Ohio, a cousin of the bride. After the ceremony and the usual congratulations, refreshments were served and the remainder of the evening was passed in social converse, music and dancing. Seldom have we seen a happier or more congenial company. Men and matrons with silvery hair, young ladies and gentlemen in their teens, all took of the festivities with equal zest and enjoyment. Among the guests were the following friends from abroad: Mr and Mrs. J. E. Peter, Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Peter, Misses May and Beulah Peter, of Manchester, Mr. Chas. Peter, of Milford, Mich., Mrs. I. C. Sheldon, of Monroeville, Ohio, Mrs. Wm. Rushton and son George, of Napoleon, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Russell, of Grass Lake, Mrs. Hattie Earle, of Bellevue, Ohio.

The supper was not over elaborate but was prepared with excellent taste and was very nicely served. The bridal gifts were numerous and costly, testifying to the high esteem in which the bride was held both by her Tecumseh friends and those from abroad.

The groom is a stranger here. He holds a responsible position as express agent on the N. Y. P. & O. Railway, enjoys a lucrative salary and is highly respected at his home in Meadville, Penn. The bride, during her few years' residence among us has become a favorite in social circles. Her services as organist in the Baptist church have been rendered with special fidelity and efficiency, and the vacancy caused by her removal will be difficult to fill. She will leave the parental roof accompanied by many "God speeds" for her future temporal and spiritual happiness.

Peter Swick, having bought a small farm, and not being able to carry all the stock and tools I have, I will sell at Auction at my residence, known as the David Harrison farm, 1 mile north of the village of Ridgeway, on Thursday, Feb. 3, 1887 at 12 m. sharp, the following property: Good milch cow, one fine wool buck, 4 shoats, breeding Sow, Minneapolis Binder, Eureka Mower, Spring Tooth Wheel Cultivator, plow, sulky rake, land roller, span of work horses, champion grain drill, new fanning mill, lumber wagon and hay rack, horse fork, rope and pulleys, set of double harness, 22 ft. ladder, 300 bushels corn, 35 fine wool sheep, quantity oats, 300 or 400 bundles cornstalks, 3 or 4 tons hay, set whiffletrees, cook stove, barrel cider, 25 acres of wheat on the ground, 15x20 ft. canvas, chains, forks, etc. Usual terms of sale.

FRANK DAVIDSON, Auct.

Since moving into my new quarters, I have added largely to my stock of caskets, coffins and funeral furnishings and have the best facilities ever enjoyed by any trader in Tecumseh in the line of undertaking. I have a hearse attached to my store, and all night calls will be promptly answered. My prices too are made to suit the times. J. S. KINSEY.

TEMPERANCE COLUMN.

Edited by a Committee of the W. C. T. U.

GIVE THE BOYS A CHANCE.

That so large a majority of the occupants of our prisons and jails are men and boys, does not prove that our heavenly Father discriminates between the sexes in the distribution of moral qualities, nor yet that men and boys ought to be expected to tempt each other to evil more than women do. Indeed, under their greatly improved surroundings, the women who do their homes, and the women who do plain, and artistic needle work, and other work for their wretched sisters in the great cities, to earn their bread, seem to be subjected to far greater and more pressing temptations than men. And why do not so many of them fall into crime?

Do you say they do? That lacks confirmation.

Do you say they sin against the laws? Therefore are not made conspicuous by arrest?

That may be part of the answer, but why do they prefer to kill themselves when they have nothing else to offer rather than invade the property rights of others by theft? And why is not the tongue of scandal as efficient an advertiser as the police record or court of justice, with so much more to serve both?

When you put a whip into the hands of your babe, [illegible] with, and a [illegible] sister, have you not begun the divergence of their moral bias? And by the time your boy has worn his knickerbockers he has fully learned that a different standard of moral obligations has been fixed for himself and her. An illustration in point.

At their breakfast table in a country village, sat a [illegible] his wife, an angel [illegible] years, and perched in her lap, a bright, precocious [illegible] girl, her dimple little hands busy with her spoon and her curly head and quick sympathies watching every word and rapidly evolving her own conclusions therefrom.

The father remarked that posters were displayed on the street announcing the advent of a minstrel troupe of slightly questionable reputation, goodbye, exclaimed the boy. "I can go can I, papa?"

"Yes, my son," was the reply. "I haven't forgotten how bravely you bore the disappointment when the last one came, and you were too ill to go."

"And you said I MUST, that I couldn't go to the next one, didn't you, oh, goodie, goodie."

"Yes, and I will take you now," said the gentleman.

"And me, too?" exclaimed the little sister, clapping her hands in ecstacy. There was no response, and she dropped her shining ringlets head to one side, the radiance of her [illegible] face just touched with a pleading expression, that betrayed an intuitive doubt, she heroically strove to repress, and looking eagerly into the parental face, she asked in tones of forced assurance, "I'm [illegible] papa?"

"No, my daughter, I think not. It is not a suitable place for little girls."

Instantly the color deepened all over the sweet face, the dancing eyes brimmed full of tears, the little chest heaved high, but the heroic will controlled the voice, though the ruby lips quivered as she said in questioning tones, "But you said brother could go?" The brother's eyes shone with sympathetic tears as he looked from father to sister, and to father again as the latter said, "But HE is a BOY, and my little girl will have to learn that there are a great many places that are suitable for boys that are not suitable for girls."

Again the dimpled hands clasped each other, very tightly this time, for the effort at self-control was great, and the big tears broke from the unwilling lids, the chin was slightly protruded, though the curly head tipped approbatively to one side, and the whole expression of the sweet face was one of love, respect, and docility, though the baby intellect evolved the momentous question which confronts every woman to day, and her quivering lips betrayed her heroism as she asked, "WHY, PAPA?"

Will you tell me WHY a place is good enough for a boy, if it will jeopardize the purity or morals of his sister?

Does such a code give our boys a fair and equal chance for Heaven?

Is it any wonder that a little further on they resume upon the lay stand prepared for them, and pass from respectable view into crime against the public? Any wonder that two-thirds of the church membership are women, and that nearly EIGHT TIMES as many men as women are in the prisons?

Dear sisters, while we pray, "Lead us not into temptation," do not fail to make your influence felt in the interest of a studying this department of work, and assisting to raise an equal standard of morals for men and women.

Clutches of a Devil Fish.

"We were lying about half a mile off the beach at the Barbadoes on board the standing rigging," said James [illegible] able seaman, "when the mate ordered [illegible] the yard, which had been [illegible] and brought around to the port side [illegible] the [illegible] It was a terrible hot day, and the water very warm and the men having bathed [illegible] lowered down to it and while I [illegible] of the boat when [illegible] of sea weed and [illegible] shape. "I [illegible] and [illegible] on [illegible] feet, and at the same moment the boy screamed out again. He voice had scarcely reached my ears when something flashed before my eyes [illegible] and pulled it down and pinned it tight to my body, and in the seconds more I knew what had happened. A devil fish had flung one of his arms about me. [illegible] was screaming at the top of his voice, and as I got a look at him I saw that two of the beast's feelers were clutching him. The arm or feeler which had reached me pinned my arm to my side as if in a vise, making a cleat wrap around my body, and the extreme end of the feeler crept up along my neck and face. Talk of pain! I never felt anything like it. The touch of a bottle of [illegible] didn't have hurt worse. It was a burning, stinging, blistering sensation as if a live coal had been laid on the flesh. I added my yells to those of Webb, but before any one came to the rail I was jerked to my knees in the boat and saw that the creature's object was to pull me overboard. I heard the boy go down and thrash about, and then three of the men came to our assistance.

"The devil fish had outwitted himself. He had gone under the ship and fastened to her bottom or keel, and as soon as he began pulling on us he of course pulled the yard clear against the ship's side. That cleared the ship, and I don't [illegible] as overboard, although I think he would have missed the yard for we were both down on the starboard side and the men almost on her ropes ends when the men jumped down. They began to cut and slash and hack with their knives and after two or three minutes they had us free not of the scaly, but of the creature. We were hoisted on board in a [illegible] and groaning with the feelers still [illegible] and they had to be cut from me almost inch by inch. Webb got it far worse than I did, as he wore a thin cotton shirt and was barefooted. He was fastened on one side, both hands and across his breast, and it was a long two [illegible] before he [illegible] again, his face swelled up until one eye was closed and the poison made me ill for many days. Where any of the cups or suckers took hold [illegible] taken off and it seemed as if pins had been stuck in the raw flesh. A native doctor brought me some herbs of wonderful [illegible] to make a poultice of, and though that relieved the pain and helped me to get a good night's sleep [illegible] Webb was [illegible] of shape.

The breath of a chronic catarrh patient is often so offensive that he cannot go into society and he becomes an an object of disgust. After a time ulceration sets in, the spongy bones are attacked, and frequently entirely destroyed. A constant source of discomfort is the dripping of the purulent secretions into the throat sometimes producing inveterate bronchitis, which in its turn has been the exciting cause of pulmonary disease. The brilliant results which have attended its use for years past properly designate Ely's Cream Balm as by far the best and only real cure.

The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off of revenue stamps from Proprietary Medicines, no doubt has largely benefited the consumers, as well as relieving the burden of home manufacturers. Especially is this the case with Dr. Bull's August Flower and Boschee's German Syrup, as the reduction of thirty-five cents per dozen, has been added to increase the size of the bottles containing these remedies, thereby giving one fifth more medicine than the 75 cent size. The August Flower for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint and the German Syrup for Coughs and Lung troubles, have perhaps the largest sale of any medicine in the world. The advantage of increased size of the bottles will be greatly appreciated by the sick and afflicted, in every town and village in civilized countries. Sample bottles for 10 cents remain the same size.

The Winter, O the Winter!
Who does not know it well?

And our dead flowers sleep in the churchyard mold,
And we pray that we soon may follow;

A "Stradivarius" Concert.

Music lovers the world over will be interested to know of the chamber concerts given here recently by the Duke and Duchess of Mendlessohn. [illegible] before, certainly not in Paris. The distinguishing feature is not the quality of music [illegible] but the fact that all the instruments were made by the great Stradivarius. The duke is a connoisseur in such matters, and has spent much time and money in securing specimens of the Italian maker's work. The musicians who took part in the chamber concerts gladly had given their own instruments to the duke that the duke placed before them, and the result was a [illegible] and delicacy of tone at least.

The duke owns eight instruments of Stradivarius, among which is a violin recently bought in England for the modest sum of 50,000 francs, or to put it more comprehensibly $10,000. It was known in London as Betts' Strad, because Betts had bought it [illegible] years ago for £1, about $5. It was made in 1701, and has been so well preserved that it looks almost like a new violin. The duke is arranging for other concerts, in which he expects to utilize his eight instruments in the performance of Mendlessohn's octette. The number of violin collectors is not great, but their passion is, and it is that that puts the price to such an extravagant height. Among the most inveterate collectors of this city is a woman whom few seem to know much about, except that she is always ready to strike a bargain for an ancient instrument. March of late training is done on the street.—Paris Letter.

Starting a Paris Daily.

The fact is that the cheapness with which a new paper can be brought out in Paris is a strong temptation for people to try their luck as editors and publishers. A very slender proportion of the large journals own either type or presses—even The Petit Journal and The Figaro being run off at Marinoni's—and hence any one with credit at a printing establishment can easily compete in promptness of issue, with the older organs. Printing, too, is cheap in Paris, and a few thousand dollars will, as to typography, put a daily in the ring for a month or two at any rate. Then, the advertising business being habitually in the hands of agents, contracts of some sort or other are easily made, although something like a guarantee of permanency is exacted by the farmers before the fourth page of the paper meets with any encouragement at their hands.

In olden times it was not as light a matter as it is nowadays to start a daily newspaper in Paris. The government's permission had to be obtained; every copy had to bear a government stamp, and political discussion was so hampered by government censors that a free expression of opinion was hardly to be thought of. All this was changed long ago. The publisher of each Parisian daily has, to be sure, to send an early copy of his paper to the prefecture, but this is little more than a formality, and the caution money and stamp were abolished many years back.—New York Times.

Salaries of Paris Journalists.

The salaries of Parisian newspaper [illegible] Written of the staff of Wolff, of The Paris Figaro, of Aurelien Scholl, of "Saint Genest," and of "Ignotus" command 50,000f. or 60,000f. a year from one morning journal, to which they furnish about three articles a week. Two hundred francs is the average price for a political leader by a well known writer contributing to one or two papers, and Rochefort's articles, be they long or short, bring him 1,000f. apiece. The principal journalists are bound to their respective journals by contracts running one, two, and three years or more. Miscellaneous contributions are bought by the line, from 3 to 10 sous being the price. Of late the clever journalists who have made a specialty of pornographic literature have come to the front, and those who have the largest following earn a richer revenue than the heavy weights of the political world. Very few Parisian journalists devote their exclusive services to one paper; their signatures turn up in all sorts of out of the way places, and without doing very hard work they realize a handsome and considerable revenue.—Cor. New York Times.

The Army of American Invalids.

The United States today has a very large army of invalids, an army that seems to be on the increase too, and one that goes marching up and down over the land seeking health and finding none. Everywhere we go, wherever location and climate have anything to offer, healing waters containing anything aught of good to assist nature in her struggle to win back out the days of those who have been victims than digestion, you will see the anxious eye and the halting gait of those who have fought the fight for gain and now, crowned with victory and success, find themselves in the great national hospital that moves about from Mouseteau Lake to Tacoma to Los Angeles, to Jacksonville, to Duluth to Denver, to Asheville, to Minnetonka, to Santa Fe, to the Hot Springs and to Cold Springs, to the iron springs and the soda springs, to the dry air of the mountains and the wet air of the sea shore, to home, that they cannot permanent and pleasure change for the future but a sad contest and the long, starless night of death.—New York Tribune.

Curious Literary Discovery.

A curious literary discovery was made at the monastery of Mekitarists on the island of St. Lazarus at Venice. A pet monkey had climbed to the top of a book case, and was amusing itself in imitating the gestures of a venerable monk who was trying to unhood a bookworm. The animal in a sudden freak, seized hold of a bundle of papers, and, breaking the seals, scattered down on the fathers a shower of letters, the sight of which had become yellow with age. They proved to be a very correspondence between Lord Byron and the monks of St. Lazarus, with whom the poet resided.—Chicago Tribune.

A Notable Exception.

Miss [illegible] expresses her belief that people [illegible] of the nature of the food they eat. Science ever noticed that a wolf devotes some lambkin through its favorite diet.—Kinderhook Rough Notes.

TECUMSEH, THURSDAY FEB. [illegible]

Spies, the orchestral leader of Detroit, died. He receives no more of Miss Nina's custard pies.

The report is again current that Secretary Manning will resign, and that his successor will be Wm. Scott of Erie, Pa.

The Detroit liquor dealers are combining to work against local option. Have not they been at work against prohibition ever since they opened their saloons?

Uncle Tom was taken to Detroit last week near Rock Rapids. But what became of Uncle Tom's cabin? Image is what people up in this neck of the woods want to know.

John L. Sullivan has broken his arm and claims that he will lose $5,000 subscriptions. If J. L. L. will only break his neck the next time he subjects public will give a monument [illegible]

Miss Phebe Stubbs of Redfield has succeeded in getting herself pretty thoroughly advertised. She and Miss Nina VanZandt should get their photographs taken together for a group. The picture would sell like hot cakes.

The Republican State Convention to nominate a candidate for the Supreme Bench and two regents of the University will assemble at Detroit on Wednesday, February 23d.

A State weather signal service is now assured. May a merciful fate save us from any clash of authority between that and the National system. We should have Dakota blizzards in plenty if such an event.

The Lansing Republican says: The weather department may snow under winter wheat, but nothing short of an act of the Legislature can snow under Bohemian oats. And the Legislative signal flags concerning that matter have a low of temperature followed by snow squall.

Now this is really too bad. Washington society is just now all agog over the alarming fact that cabbage is cooked in the White House. But then, guard it never so carefully, a cabbage head will work its way into the White house occasionally.—Lansing Republican.

Notwithstanding the fact that Miss VanZandt objects to being exhibited in wax in a Chicago museum, there is more or less eternal fitness in such a panorama. The readiness with which she receives impressions proves that there is something soft about her somewhere. Perhaps she should have been modeled in clay, however.

Here is what the Chicago Inter-Ocean says about it: Several ambitious Democratic organs are engaged in criticising President Cleveland. But the fact remains that he is the big and only boss in sight of the Democracy, and when he gets ready he will switch the kickers into the traces so quick that they will forget that they have been kicking in the dashboard.

No colored man need apply. This was the declaration of the United States Senate yesterday in its action upon the nomination of the colored man, J. C. Matthews, to be Recorder of Deeds of the District of Columbia. Mr. Matthews was rejected in spite of his admitted fitness, simply because he was a colored man. The President should meet this issue squarely by nominating another colored man, and let the Senate repeat its declaration that a black skin is a bar to political advancement.—Philadelphia Times.

If President Cleveland had allowed Henry Watterson to dictate a number of first class appointments the Courier Journal would be foremost in praising him as a wise, patriotic and sagacious President. So with many other Democrat mugwumps. The animus of their onslaught is so apparent that the attack loses much of its virulence and people are learning to size the fellows up in proper rows. The great mass of voters are pleased with President Cleveland's business administration and he will be stronger in the race 1888 than he was in 1884. Mr. Watterson and his fellow malcontents will sit on a store box and view the procession go by, and after it has passed they will wonder at their own insignificance.—Toledo Bee.

OUR LANSING LETTER.

LANSING, FEB. 1, 1887.

tive programme last Saturday. Instead of adjourning from Friday night until the following Monday night the house actually held a two hours session Saturday forenoon, and adjourned until 10 A. M. Monday, when the senate, according to the announcement of everybody, met only long enough morning but positively to do an hour's work. [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] which Mr. Brown introduced a bill to prevent the inhuman treatment of girls unfortunate enough to fall into the hands of those monsters who keep these dens of iniquity, five years imprisonment is too adequate punishment. The accounts he gives supplemented by the terrible revelations of some of the victims, read more like legends of barbarous ages than occurrences of the nineteenth century.

A joint resolution was passed and copies submitted to the Michigan senators and representatives in Congress, requesting them to use their best efforts to secure such legislation by congress as will result in the United States acquiring the ownership of the Portage Lake canal for the purpose of a harbor of refuge and of making the canal a free water way. The canal is now owned by New York capitalists, who impose excessive tolls upon passengers and freight.

The Rairden-Gudenau contested election case was decided Thursday, Jan. 27, by the unseating of the latter. The recount by the senate election committee of the ballot boxes of the uncertain district found Rairden to have 14 plurality, whereas the tally sheets of the same boxes gave Gudenau a plurality of 30. Mr. Gudenau is a Democrat, and his successful opponent is a Labor Republican and proprietor of the Detroit Labor Leaf.

President Angell on behalf of the regents of the university and the city council of Ann Arbor has invited the members of the legislature to accept the hospitality of the citizens and the freedom of the city, and visit the university, on Thursday, Feb. 3. The invitation was accepted and the details of the trip arranged by a joint committee. A special train will take the members to Ann Arbor, from whence it is expected they will go direct to Detroit to attend the reception of Gen. Alger on the afternoon and evening of the 4th.

THE GREAT PIONEER NEWSPAPER

The proud distinction of being the oldest newspaper in the State of Michigan belongs to The Free Press. Established more than fifty years ago, its career has been one of uninterrupted success.

The history of The Free Press is the history of Michigan. It was established in this commonwealth when it was yet a territory. The Free Press was recognized as a power in the land in the time of the admission into the sisterhood of states. From that day to this, the editorials of the paper have always been directed to the support of what it deems the state's best interests, with the growth and development of which its fortunes are identified.

It is no wonder then that The Free Press claims the right to be called the paper of Michigan, the paper that more honorable title of [illegible] first paper—the best for the Merchant, Farmer, the Household, the Family, and, when quality of matter is considered, the cheapest question [illegible]

In the Daily is published in compact, readable form, in addition to its own special despatches, all the News, Associated Press News, Quotations of the Produce, Stock and Money Markets, Congressional, Legislative and State News, and all the News of the World, besides a splendid selection of current Literary matter. The Free Press is issued every day in the year, Sundays excepted. Daily, 12 to 16 pages Sunday, and is delivered by Local Agents in all the cities and towns of the state that can be reached on the day of publication. The price is 15 cents a week. It is also sent by mail to any address for 50 cents a month or $7 a year.

The Weekly Free Press.

To those who for any reason cannot arrange to take the Daily, is offered the Weekly edition, a fifty six columns paper—brim full of magazine-newspaper reading matter, crisp, attractive, interesting and instructive. Original stories, both short and continued; topics of the times; the household, contributed by women readers; letter box and puzzles; pointed editorial comment; special articles on thousands of subjects, and a complete summary of the news of the week are among its attractions. It numbers among its regular contributors a larger number of the best known authors and writers than any other journal. Its circulation is enormous—exceeding one hundred thousand copies per week. If money, industry and enterprise can keep it so, it will continue to be regarded as one of the leading weekly newspapers of America. Price one dollar per year. Every family in Michigan ought to take The Free Press.

THE STORY OF A MINE.

By BRET HARTE.

(Copyrighted, 1886, by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., and published by arrangement [illegible])

[illegible]

"Another of your fellows [illegible] in the Japanese [illegible] Lady Gaslight [illegible] woman, and game, and almost [illegible] an ass," [illegible] "don't you see she can't go [illegible] without a chaperon or somebody to [illegible]?"

"But," [illegible] Wilks, "[illegible] some power, there's Judge Mason and Senator Peabody, who are [illegible] about her, and [illegible] supported her the night [illegible] day."

Maurice Robinson [illegible]:

"Mason and Peabody [illegible] literary and artistic, and [illegible] to pique me."

"But [illegible]."

"Is [illegible] a lady [illegible]?"

"Hardly. I should say [illegible] and devoted to his [illegible] that even you [illegible] sneer.

"There, you are [illegible] again, and, [illegible] standing your [illegible] her because he has probably [illegible]. Wait till he comes to Washington [illegible] opportunity for comparison [illegible] frank glance at her [illegible] with a sighing bow, [illegible]."

Mr. Gashwiler [illegible] own success with Congress. "We are [illegible] a few days of the end of the session. We will manage to have it taken up and passed through before that fellow Peabody knows what he is about."

"If it could be done before he gets back," said Wilks, "it's a personal [illegible]. He is delayed two days, he might have to be delayed longer." Here Mr. Wilks [illegible] the accident had happened [illegible] road, and the stage had [illegible] the abyss, what valuable time [illegible] been saved, and success became [illegible]. But Mr. Wilks' functions [illegible] could be taxed as costs.

"We need have no fears, sir," resumed Mr. Gashwiler, "the matter is now in the hands of the highest tribunal of appeal in the country. It will meet, sir, with inflexible justice. I have already prepared some remarks."

"By the way," interrupted Wilks [illegible], "where's your young man, your private secretary—Dobbs?"

The congressman for a moment looked confused. "He is not here. And I must correct your error in applying that term to him. I have never put my confidence in the hands of any one."

"But you introduced him to me as your secretary."

"A mere honorary title, sir. A Brevet rank. I might, it is true, have thought to repose such a trust in him. But I was deceived, sir, as I fear I am too apt to be when I permit my feelings as a man to overcome my duty as an American legislator. Mr. Dobbs enjoyed my patronage and the opportunity it gave me to introduce him into public life only to abuse it. He became, I fear, deeply indebted. His extravagance was unlimited, his ambition unbounded, but without, sir, a cash basis. I advanced money to him from time to time upon the little property you so generously extended to him for his services. But it was quickly dissipated. Yet, sir, such is the ingratitude of man that his family lately appealed to me for assistance. I felt it was necessary to be stern, and I refused. I would not for the sake of his family say anything, but I have missed, sir, books from my library. On the day after he left two volumes of patent office reports and a Blue book of congress, purchased that day by me at a store on Pennsylvania avenue, were missing—missing. I had difficulty, sir, great difficulty in keeping it from the papers."

As Mr. Wilks had heard the story already from Gashwiler's acquaintances, with more or less free comment on the latter legislator's economy, he could not help thinking that the difficulty had been great indeed. But he only fixed his [illegible] eye on Gashwiler and said:

"[illegible] is gone, eh?"

"Yes."

"And with [illegible]?"

"Yes."

Mr. Gashwiler tried to look dignified, but concerned, at something in his visitor's manner made him uneasy.

"I'll [illegible] have Lisbon [illegible] where in the [illegible] hell, and will [illegible] trunk which [illegible] Napoleon [illegible] some [illegible] Lisbon [illegible] paper."

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

Mr. Gashwiler sat [illegible] and a pallid [illegible] [illegible] day.

The card that had been [illegible] was now the same as [illegible] in the right hand [illegible] most [illegible] "Hon. [illegible] Wilks." Perhaps [illegible] the name and its [illegible] caught his visitor's taste, [illegible] his quest. Though he [illegible] would be kind enough to [illegible] she replied so frankly that her [illegible] [illegible] Gashwiler [illegible] [illegible] and in an instant [illegible] [illegible] Mr. Wilks [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D.C., Jan. 28, '87.

[illegible] at least two notable things this week. It has given the British Lion's tail a vicious twist, and it has again refused to give the women who want to vote a chance [illegible] ment on Woman Suffrage to the State Legislature.

It is interesting to be reminded now and then that the American house can still seat and that the great [illegible] These superior battery of Senatorial mantels Pope and Hale furnished people need of late. The occasion was debated on the Hill supposedly for the benefit of all the people of the United States, but that [illegible] perhaps, to be retaliation, as [illegible] upon Britain passages in Violet [illegible] Treaty bearing on the subject [illegible] Anglo-American fishermen to indulge in outrages in Canadian waters.

Senator Ingalls thought it was time to settle the fishery difficulties either by negotiation or by war. The measure under discussion was distinctly one of retaliation. It was an eye for an eye, a fish for a fish, an insult for an insult. Countries had been inundated with blood on less provocation.

Senator Frye declared that the annals of history even of the Fiji Islands might be searched without finding cases of outrages so flagrant and so [illegible]. All these cases had been brought to the attention of the British government. There was not a line in the history of England for the last [illegible] years that gave the slightest reason to believe that at the pursuit of gain, in the pursuit of trade, she would every and the right of another to stand in the way of her progress. Senator Morgan thought the law could be enacted without bloodthirsty threats, and Senator Vest advised quietude.

When the cause of woman came up in the Senate Tuesday, there were about a hundred ladies from all parts of the country in the Senate gallery anxiously awaiting the result. Senator Blair of New Hampshire, woman's best Senatorial friend, had promised to make an effort to get the question up for debate at this hour. The pet measures of several Senators were in the way as unfinished business, but they gallantly voted against their own bills in favor of the ladies. Senator Beck was one of these. He had intended to bring up his bill preventing Members of Congress from acting as attorneys for railroads, and he mentioned that a distinguished lady Miss Anthony had sent in for him three times the day before, and he had refused to go out to see her because he knew he would be unable to refuse what she would ask. He knew she would ask him to waive the claims of his important question in favor of hers.

The women are not asking Congress to let them vote, as Congress has not that power. They ask Congress to agree that the following proposed amendment to the Constitution may be submitted to the various State legislatures. "The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied on account of sex. Congress shall have power, by appropriate legislation, to enforce the provisions of this article."

Half a dozen Senators made short speeches for and against woman suffrage, and then by a vote of 34 to 16 the proposed amendment was again rejected. The disappointed ladies in the gallery repaired immediately to the Metropolitan Church, where they opened their nineteenth annual convention in Washington. There they discussed man in general and the lawmakers of the United States in particular in language suitable to their outraged feelings.

It was sad to see Miss Anthony, that grim resolute veteran of woman's fight for woman, just a little discouraged. After waiting and working so hard for forty years, she acknowledged that the promised land seemed yet a long way off. She knew that woman must have all her rights in time, but there was no telling how long she would have to wait.

For Animals.

Mange, Distemper, Diarrhœa and Worms in dogs quickly cured. Scratches, Sores, Galls, Bruises, Cuts or wounds of any kind quickly and permanently healed by washing with the Fluid. Dr. J. Hough, the distinguished Veterinary Surgeon, says: "I find Darby's Prophylactic Fluid all that it is represented. As a local application I believe it to be without an equal." For Colic and Scours it acts like magic.

A New York doctor says that those who have the headache are the most sympathetic. If there was ever a man with the headache who cared a copper how soon the whole world and everybody else and their mothers-in-law went to the bow-wows, he has escaped us.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla is prescribed and recommended by eminent physicians. Good is taken with perfect safety by old and young. Its cleansing and invigorating effects are felt speedily, and it is universally acknowledged to be the most reliable blood purifier.

Our Daily Bread.

Heavy and sour bread or biscuit has a vast influence through the digestive organs upon the measure of health we [illegible] happiness and future usefulness, the blessing of good health and a sound constitution are, we can only realize when we have lost them, and when it is too late to repair the damage. Not wishing to deprive these facts, thousands unnecessarily jeopardize not only their health, but their lives, and the health and lives of others, by using articles in the preparation of their food, the purity and healthfulness of which they know nothing. Perhaps a few results may have been noted, or it may have [illegible] tables used, and the housekeeper takes the responsibility and possibly will never know the mischief that has been wrought. Dyspeptics may have pills of headache, the children may have lost their appetites, or look pale, but the true cause is rarely suspected. The weather, the lack of out-door air, or some other cause is given, and the dangerous, poisonous system of adulterated food goes on. Next to the flour, which should be made of good wheat and not ground too fine, the most of baking powder, which includes the rising properties, is of the greatest importance, and of the two we recommend Royal Baking powder, and always use the Royal, as we thereby retain the original properties of the wheat, no fermentation taking place. This action of the Royal Baking powder upon the dough is simply to swell it and form little cells through every part. These cells are filled with carbonic acid gas, which passes off during the process of baking.

The Royal is made from pure grape acid, and it is the action of this acid upon the highly carbonized bicarbonate of soda that generates the gas alluded to, and these ingredients are so pure and so perfectly fitted, tested and adapted to each other, that the action is mild and permanent, and is continued during the whole time of baking, and no trace of poisonous ingredients remains to undermine the health, no heavy biscuits, no sour bread, but if directions are followed, every article will be found sweet and wholesome.

"Yes, Mr. Oldboy," She simpered, "I have seen twenty-seven springs, would you think it?" "Well, yes, ma'am, I don't know but what I would," Mr. Oldboy said, "and I guess some of them springs must have been very backward."

As the greatest pain cure, St. Jacobs Oil is recommended by public men of America and other countries. Hon. Aulla Flint, Life-Senator of the Dominion parliament, Canada, found it to be act like a charm.

Fur cuffs, with a spring fitting them to the wrist, are a comfortable addition to the street toilet.

THE CHARLES A. VOGELER CO., BALTIMORE, MD.

DR. A. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with inflammation.

It never fails to store the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame, every bone, muscle, nerve, and membrane is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years.

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use with in be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Prices 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

Sweet as May showers, Drexel's Bell Cologne.

The breath of a chronic catarrh patient is often so offensive that he cannot go into society and he becomes an an object of disgust. After a time ulceration sets in, the spongy bones are attacked, and frequently entirely destroyed. A constant source of discomfort is the dripping of the purulent secretions into the throat sometimes producing inveterate bronchitis, which in its turn has been the exciting cause of pulmonary disease. The brilliant results which have attended its use for years past properly designate Ely's Cream Balm as by far the best and only real cure.

Decided checks appear in many of the new English woolens.

There is absolute danger in coated breath servorings. Trix are absolutely pure and perfectly perfumed.

Vests of beaver, natural seal or black Persian lamb are seen in some of the new seal jackets.

WHAT TRUE MERIT WILL DO.

The unprecedented sale of Boschee's German Syrup within a few years, has astonished the world. It is with doubt the safest and best remedy ever discovered for the speedy and effectual cure of Coughs, Colds and the severest Lung troubles. It acts on an entirely different principle from the usual prescriptions given by Physicians, as it does not dry up a Cough and leave the disease still in the system, but on the contrary removes the cause of the trouble, heals the parts affected and leaves them in a purely healthy condition. A bottle kept in the house for use when the disease make their appearance, will save doctor's bills and a long spell of serious illness. A trial will convince you of these facts. It is positively sold by all druggists and general dealers in the land. Price, 75 cts. large bottle.

A CITY COURTSHIP.

PARIS SCHOOLBOY PROCESSIONS.

An Attempt on the Part of Parisian Boys to Intimidate the Government.

There is no English equivalent for bonne. This French word means an adjectival expression conveying no sign plus or minus. But it also means in schoolboys and students' slang a procession through the streets in a single file, got up in vindication of their dignity and rights, which have been ignored and trampled upon by their masters during the term. The cadets of the Ecole Polytechnique have a bonne at Christmas, when they walk up and down the principal thoroughfares to let off the overflowing spirits of youth at being released from the stern military discipline of that establishment. Their behavior is always most orderly, and their bonne is now recognized as a time honored tradition. Some of the large Paris schools have imitated the Ecole Polytechnique, but in a less becoming spirit. In their case the manifestation is as a rule organized by a few old boys upon whom time hangs heavily, who have nothing to fear for themselves and who care not if their juniors get into scrapes.

The day before the school breaks up it is usual for the master to send a notice round the classes warning the boys against taking part in any Christmas procession under heavy penalties. But his words are lost on the mischievous characters who arrange to meet their seniors, the ringleaders, at some place of call directly the gates are thrown open. The boys, yelling and whooping, form into Indian file, and shape their course in zigzag through the most crowded thoroughfares, winding like a sea monster from pavement to pavement so as to utterly obstruct traffic. The file is sometimes broken by the police, but after an interval resumes the march. Meanwhile, ushers have been following them taking down the names of the agitators. The punishment at French schools for laziness or bad behavior is a cruel one, and must be injurious to the health. It is two to eight hours' detention on Sunday, to be employed in writing off so many hundreds of lines by way of an imposition. This punishment is also incurred for not earning a certain average of marks. It effectually puts out any spark of intelligence left in a boy, or else makes a desperado of him.

The other day a gang of such madcaps, about 200 strong, went in a bonne to the ministry of public instruction, shouting, "Shame to Goblet! Shame to Berthelot!" on the way. It appears that the new minister had been expected to give them a few extra days' holiday on the occasion of his coming into power, and the schoolboys, disappointed, inasmuch as the New Year's holiday is of five days only, sought to frighten M. Berthelot into granting a longer one. As nobody, however, appeared at the windows of the government office the party went off to a rather low cafe at Montmartre. There they had a merry drinking bout and spent their last coppers. Several speakers hurled defiance in impromptu speeches at M. Berthelot, head masters and ushers, but before long the listeners, struck with qualms of conscience or possibly afraid of the consequences of their escapade dispersed quietly and went to their homes.—Paris Cor. London News.

New Newspaper in China.

They are going to start a new newspaper in China. It is to be a weekly journal published in English and called The Chinese Times. The Chinese Times is the result of a successful venture made with a native print. The Shch Pao, which started last May, and has been prosperous ever since. The secret of its popularity is stated with reasonable pride in the prospectus of the forthcoming paper, and the proprietors confidently trust that by conducting their new paper on the lines of the old they will command an equally wide circulation. Their plan is simplicity itself. They will abuse everybody by turns and no one long, and they hope by proofs adhering to this principle to placate the beast of The Chinese Times, as they do, of The Shch Pao, that, in the short space of six months, there is scarcely one nationality represented in Pekin but what has more or less articulately complained of the hospitality of the paper.—Chicago Times.

Behind the Footlights.

The people who are born to the sock and buskin enjoy a "vamanderie" into which no other less fortunate person enters. These persons who, as a rule, make the best actors and actresses are those who are born in the profession. The child brought up behind the footlights is sure to know the major duties of the stage better than the inspired genius who shall study them for years. Mrs. John Drew.

Edgeration.

Dog fancers are looking out for the edgeration of their pets. He has to only exhibited a professorship of something or other. Wonderfully intelligent, he can be put to any number of tricks, such as playing cards, playing the piano, and playing the piano with New York Philharmonic.

Monday was the most disagreeable day we have had this winter.

The sick in and about the village are on the gain at present.

Mrs. Betsy S——, who is making her home at W——, suffered a paralytic stroke Saturday, and is quite poorly.

Irving Bush's horses have the distemper and are in a hard condition.

Professor Martin Palmer of Flat Rock, spent Saturday with friends and relatives here.

Prof. H. C. Wilson of Blissfield, was in the village Saturday.

E. B. Rice of Adrian tuned Samuel Rappleye's and David Coryell's pianos last week.

Several hundred oak staves were delivered at the station last week to be shipped.

Mrs. M. A. Barrett has recently purchased the state right to sell the Pedigo Perfection Washer. A sample machine can be seen by calling at the Post Office.

Ace Smith went to Grand Ledge, Saturday to spend a few days with his daughter, Mrs. H. Brown.

There was a very large attendance at the donation given at the church Thursday evening of last week, the receipts amounting to $118.35. The chicken pies were numerous and of the best quality and the tables presented a very inviting appearance. A good many of the friends from Britton were present and all enjoyed a social time.

Whenever Tink begins hinting at Dave about his future intentions, Dave says: "Never you mind, Tink, there is no crank on my collar," and Pink exits into the tinshop.

Some of the youngsters enjoyed a very pleasant evening at the house of Leona Beevers last Friday night. One of the boys, after leaving his fair one "lilly of the evening" at her home, started for home and indulged in a snooze, and when he woke up found his horse standing in the yard behind the barn.

A meeting of the Library Association was held at Cottage Hall, Saturday night. The association adopted their constitution and selected Dr. Lobee's lot as the sight for the Library Hall. The following were elected as building committee: G. P. Waring, Warren Jones, W. R. Wilson, Dr. R. H. Nelson.

The L. G. Social will be held at the home of Mrs. Joseph Billmeyer, in Raisin, on Friday night of this week instead of Mrs. J. F. Temple's as reported last week, the change being made on account of sickness in Mrs. Temple's family. Mrs. Billmeyer extends a cordial invitation to all. Any who have not got a conveyance to go with will be provided for if they will leave word with Mrs. R. H. Temple or Mrs. A. J. Sutton.

Wednesday afternoon of last week the W. F. M. society met at the home of Mrs. Benjamin Beevers in Raisin and enjoyed a pleasant time, the attendance being very good. After an hour or two of social converse, dinner was served by the hostess, consisting of turkey, biscuit, cake, pie, jelly, cheese, etc. It was one of the finest repasts the society has been privileged to enjoy for a long time. They wish to return their heart felt appreciation to Mrs. Beeves for her kindness in sending a team to get those who have no conveyance to attend the meeting.

Quite a little amusement was occasioned at the donation Thursday evening by the appearance of J. E. Thomas of Adrian, who was in search of Mrs. Owen who came over from Adrian to attend the donation as the guest of Harry Smith and family. It seems that Mrs. Owen had been to work for Thomas, and as he is a widower, and she a widow, he wanted her to become his better half, but on account of a little grandchild which she has to care for some misunderstanding arose and she left, and as Smith had formed her acquaintance and been petting in his fun called on Smith to be had invited her to accompany him to the donation and she accepted. Harrison is shipping windmills to Buenos Ayres and South America, and yet Congress gives away the supply of wind, on land or none consumption.

Michigan raised 86 hogs for each of its inhabitants last year. She should try and go for better next year and make it an even hog for each inhabitant.

A bill for constructing proper coast defences that congress could pass in an hour would have a more wholesome effect upon Canada than forty retaliatory measures.

An Ohio divine has received a horse as a reward as an M. E. minister. Great Scott, what are we coming to? The Episcopalians, when not fighting over politics or looking for natural gas, are always doing some starting thing.

A European war would send up the price of wheat, but as a compensating evil, it would fill the newspapers with war maps. Perhaps however we could endure the one for the sake of the other.

The inter-state commerce bill has received the signature of the President and is now a law. The lawyers are already disputing in regard to its provisions, and nobody seems to know exactly what it means.

The legislative visiting party was entertained by the University authorities at Ann Arbor last Thursday evening and Friday. They were royally received and visited all the attractions of the University.

The arrest of a Michigan school teacher the other day for kissing a pretty pupil proves that a war with England is not the most formidable danger which threatens America to-day. It is about time somebody appointed a committee of arbitration to define a fellow's osculatory rights and privileges.—Lansing Republican.

Non-partisan organizations are being formed in many of the cities of the state to promote the success of the prohibitory amendment. This is a wise move. Give the people a chance to vote upon this important question on its own merits, unawed by party dictation and unbribed by party leaders. We shall then know what the actual sentiment of the people may be.

Disguise it as they may, the fact remains patent to the country and the world that Mr. Matthews has been practically twice rejected by the senate solely because he is not a white man, and it is undeniable that his rejection was accomplished by the votes of Republican Senators who have professed special devotion to equal rights for the colored race. It is a frank confession of the utter hypocrisy of politicians in their declared purpose to maintain equal civil rights for colored citizens, and it stamps upon them the dregs of the stain of the bondman. It is notice to colored voters of intelligence that equal rights for their race are not to be gained until they assert their own self respect by absolute independence in political action. Then, and not till then, will equal rights be enjoyed by our freedmen.—Philadelphia Times.

The Anarchist-coddler, Nina Van Zandt, has done something for her country. Not to marrying Spies, the country does not care a great deal that she should propagate his kind, but in disguiring and revealing the Chicago anarchists. Never do girls now gazing longingly from the windows of locked upper rooms at the walk wave their handkerchiefs with all their blessed. Both Cupid and Hymen will frantically serenade her. Every other young man can be wedded immediately to the object of his or her affections without being there at the age when most of the world's marriages have established face. THE STORY OF A MINE.

By BRET HARTE.

(Copyright d, 1886, by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., and published by arrangement with them.)

The senator, as visibly becoming limp and weak again behind his entrenchments, managed to say, "Oh, no!" then "really," and finally, "Thanks!"

"I am here but for a day. I return to California in a day, as it were, to-morrow. I shall never, never hear you speak in your place in the Capitol of this great country!"

The senator still hastily that he feared—he in fact was convinced—that his duty during this session was required more at his desk, in the committee work, than in speaking, etc., etc.

"Ah," said Carmen sadly, "it is true, then, all this that I have heard. It is true that what they hope told me—that you have given up the great party—that your voice is not longer heard in the old—what you call this—eh—the old issues!"

"If any one has told you that, Miss De Haro," responded the senator sharply, "he has spoken foolishly. You have been misinformed. May I ask who——"

"Ah," said Carmen, "I know not! It is in the air. I am a stranger. Perhaps I am deceived. But it is of all. I say to them, When shall I hear him speak? I go day after day to the Capitol, I watch him—the great emancipator—but it is of business, eh!—it is the claim of that one, it is the tax, eh!—it is the impost, it is the postoffice, but it is the great speech of human rights—never, never. I say, 'How arrives all this?' And some say, and shake their heads, 'Never again he speaks.' He is what you call 'played—yes, it is so, eh!—played out.' I know it not—it is a word from Boston, perhaps! They say he has—eh, I speak not the English well—the party he has shaken, 'shook'—yes—he has the party 'shaken,' eh! It is right—it is the language of Boston, eh!"

"Permit me to say, Miss De Haro," returned the senator, rising with some asperity, "that you seem to have been unfortunate in your selection of acquaintances, and still more so in your ideas of the derivations of the English tongue. The—er—the—er—expressions you have quoted are not common to Boston, but emanate, I believe, from the west."

Carmen De Haro contritely buried every thing but her black eyes in her shawl.

"No one," he continued, more gently, sitting down again, "has the right to forecast from my past what I intend to do in the future, or designate the means I may choose to serve the principles I hold or the party I represent. These are my functions. At the same time should occasion or opportunity—for we are within a day or two of the close of the session——"

"Yes," interrupted Carmen sadly, "I see—it will be some business, some claim, something for somebody—ah! Madre de Dios—you will not speak, and I——"

"When do you think of returning?" asked the senator, with grave politeness, "when are we to lose you?"

"I shall stay to the last—to the end of the session," said Carmen. "And now I shall go." She got up and pulled her shawl viciously over her shoulders, with a pretty pettishness, perhaps the most feminine thing she had done that evening. Possibly, the most genuine.

The senator smiled affably. "You do not deserve to be disappointed in either case, but, it is later than you imagine; let me help you on the shorter distance in my carriage—it is at the door."

He accompanied her gravely to the carriage. As it rolled away she buried her little figure in its ample cushions and chuckled to herself, albeit a little hysterically. When she had reached her destination she found herself crying, and hastily, and somewhat angrily, dried her eyes as she drew up at the door of her lodging.

"How have you prospered?" asked Mr. Harlowe, counsel for Royal Thatcher, as he gallantly assisted her from the carriage. "I have been waiting here for two hours, your interview must have been prolonged—that was a good sign."

"Oh, so, so, now," said Carmen in a little scornful, foreign drawl and tired.

"Mr. Harlowe, I trust you will be kind enough to keep this conversation from Mr. Thatcher."

Carmen's brain took fire. Which side should she favor? Which was bribed?

"He was so well upon the place. He looking around as she spoke, and he would be so glad to see you."

Carmen did not reply.

The lawyer hesitated. Other lips than the great New England lawyer's have touched with light pencil "woman's"

Carmen was tired. Carmen was worried. Carmen was little—not prepared to be treated easily. Consequently she said, [illegible]

CHAPTER XV.

HOW THE ONE UNFINISHED BUSINESS.

The closing of the —— congress was in like the closing of the several previous congresses. There was the same unbusinesslike, impractical haste, the same hurried, unjust and utterly inadequate adjustment of unfinished business. The senator, who had been liberated for a moment by the sovereign people to any private interest they controlled. There were frauds rushed through, there were long suffering, righteous demands neglected, there were honest measures [illegible] honored by many appropriations, there were closing scenes which only the sinking sense of American humor kept from being utterly vile. The actors, the legislators themselves, knew it and laughed at it; the commentators, [illegible] audience, the great American people, knew it and laughed at it. And, nobody being an instant convinced that it could under any circumstances, might be otherwise.

The claim of Roscommon was among the unfinished business. The claimant himself, haggard, pathetic, [illegible] was among the unfinished business of Congress. Various congressmen, more or less interested in the success of the claim, were among the unfinished business. The member from Fresno, who had changed his derringer for a speech against the claimant, was among the unfinished business. The gifted Gashwiler, uneasy in his soul over certain other unfinished business in the shape of his missing letters, but dropping oil and honey as he mangled with his brothers, was king of misrule and lord of the unfinished business. Pretty Mrs. Hopkinson, prudently escorted by her husband, but imprudently ogled by admiring congressmen, lent the charm of her presence to the finishing of unfinished business. One or two editors, who had dreams of a finished financial business, arising out of unfinished business, were there also, like ancient bards, to record with pean or threnody the completion of unfinished business. Various unclean birds, scenting carrion in unfinished business, hovered in the halls or roosted in the lobby.

The lower house, under the tutelage of the gifted Gashwiler, drank deeply of Roscommon and his intoxicating claim, and passed the half empty bottle to the senate as "unfinished business. But, alas! in the very rush and storm, and tempest of the unfinishing business, an unlooked-for interruption arose in the person of a great senator whose power none could oppose, whose right to free and extended utterance at all times none could gainsay. A claim for poultry, violently seized by the army of Sherman during his march through Georgia, from the barnyard of an alleged loyal Irishman, opened a constitutional question, and with it the lips of the great senator.

For seven hours he spoke eloquently, earnestly, convincingly. For seven hours the old issues of party and policy were severally taken up and dismissed in the old forcible rhetoric that had early made him famous. Interruptions from other senators, now forgotful of unfinished business, and wild with reanimated party zeal; interruptions from certain senators mindful of unfinished business and unable to pass the Roscommon bottle, only spurred him to fresh exertion. The tocsin sounded in the senate was heard in the lower house. Highly excited members congregated at the doors of the senate and left unfinished business to take care of itself.

Left to itself for seven hours, unfinished business gnashed its false teeth and tore its wig in impotent fury in corridor and hall. For seven hours the gifted Gashwiler had continued the manufacture of oil and honey, whose sweetness, however, was slowly palling upon the congressional lip, for seven hours Roscommon and friends beat with impatient feet the lobby and shook lists, more or less discolored, at the distinguished senator. For seven hours the one or two editors were obliged to sit and calmly compliment the great speech which that night flashed over the wires of a continent with the old electric thrill. And, worse than all, they were obliged to recall with it the closing of the —— congress, with more than the usual amount of unfinished business.

A little group of friends surrounded the great senator with hymns of praise and congratulations. Old adversaries saluted him courteously as they passed by with the respect of strong men. A little woman with a shawl drawn over her shoulders, and held with one small brown hand, approached him timidly:

"I speak not the English well," she said gently, "but I have read much. I have read in the plays of your Shakespeare. I would like to say to you the words of Rosalind to Orlando when he did fight. 'Sir, you have wrestled well, and have overthrown more than your enemies.'" And with these words she was gone.

Yet not so quickly but that poetry Mrs. Hopkinson coming—as Victrix always comes to Victor to thank the great senator—albeit the faces of her escorts were shrouded in gloom—saw the shawled figure disappear.

"There," she said, pinching Wiles mischievously, "there! that's the woman you were afraid of. Look at her. Look at that dress. Ah, heavens! look at that shawl! Didn't I tell you she had no style?"

"Who is she?" said Wiles sullenly.

"Carmen de Haro, of course," said the lady vivaciously. "What are you thinking away so for? You're absolutely pulling me along."

Mr. Wiles had just caught sight of the tray-worn face of Royal Thatcher peering the crowd that thronged the corridor. Thatcher appeared pale and distress. Mr. Harlowe, the counsel, at his side, turned hurriedly.

"No one won't think you had just got a new lease of your property, and so need a good solicitor. Where is the money with your Miss De Haro passed in—eh? Is she the attorney for the senator? Why, I say, I recognize her!"

"I was thinking of—of—of—"

"Well, you take things easily. And so I think you are right. And I'm sure I don't know what Royal Thatcher's face means, unless he's hungry. Come, let's—"

"Carmen did not reply."

The lawyer hesitated. Other lips than the great New England lawyer's have touched with light pencil "woman's"

Carmen was tired. Carmen was worried. Carmen was little—not prepared to be treated easily. Consequently she said, [illegible]

"I found him a gentleman."

CHAPTER XVI.

AND WHO FORGOT IT.

It was somewhat [illegible] Royal Thatcher's embarrassment and [illegible] he should on [illegible] [illegible] Harlowe [illegible] ship was not at home, he would become again [illegible] was [illegible] that [illegible] was [illegible] [illegible] absent at any moment, he had [illegible] his duty. In fact, there was scarcely any [illegible] the imagination which [illegible] practical man did not permit himself to indulge in, yet always with a certain consciousness that he was allowing his feelings to run away with him—a fact that did not tend to make him better humored, and rather inclined him to place the responsibility of the elopement on somebody else. If Miss De Haro had been home, etc., etc., and not going into ecstacies over speeches, etc., etc., and had attended to her business, i. e., being exactly what he had supposed her to be—all this would not have happened.

I am aware that this will not heighten the reader's respect for my hero. But I fancy that the imperceptible progress of a sincere passion in the matured strong man is apt to be marked with even more than the usual haste and absurdity of callous youth. The fever that runs riot in the veins of the robust is apt to pass your ailing weakling by. Possibly there may be some immunity in inoculation. It is lethargic who is always sell possessed and does and says the right thing, while poor honest Cupid becomes ridiculous with genuine emotion.

He rejoined his lawyer in no very gracious mood. The chambers occupied by Mr. Harlowe were in the basement of a private dwelling once occupied and made historic by an Honorable Somebody, who, however, was remembered only by the landlord and the last tenant. There were various alcoves in the walls divided into compartments, sarcastically known as "pigeon holes," in which the dove of peace had never rested, but which still perpetuated in their legends the feuds and animosities of suitors now but common dust together. There was a portrait, apparently of a chemist, which on nearer inspection turned out to be a famous English lord chancellor in his flowing wig. There were hooks with dreary, shunning titles—egotistic always, as recording Smith's opinions on this and Jones' commentaries on that. There was a handbill tacked on the wall, which at first offered hilarious suggestions of a circus or a steamboat excursion, but which turned out only to be a sheriff's sale. There were several oddly shaped packages in newspaper wrappings, mysterious and awful in dark corners, that might have contained forgotten law papers or the previous week's washing of the eminent counsel. There were one or two newspapers, which at first offered entertaining prospects to the waiting client, but always proved to be a law record or a supreme court decision. There was the bust of a late distinguished jurist, which apparently had never been dusted since he himself became dust, and had already grown a perceptibly dusty mustache on his severely judicial upper lip. It was a cheerless place in the sunshine of day; at night, when it ought by every suggestion of its dusty past to have been left to the vengeful ghosts, the greater part of whose hopes and passions were recorded and gathered there; when in the dark the dead hands of forgotten men were stretched from their dusty graves to fumble once more for their old title deeds, at night, when it was lit up by flaring gaslight, the hollow mockery of this dissipation was so apparent that people in the streets, looking through the illuminated windows, felt as if the privacy of a family vault had been intruded upon by body snatchers.

Royal Thatcher glanced around the room, took in all its dreary suggestions in a half weary, half indifferent sort of way, and dropped into the lawyer's own revolving chair as the gentleman entered from the adjacent room.

"Well, you've kept your [illegible]," said Harlowe briskly.

"Yes," said his client, without looking up, and with this notable distinction between himself and all other previous clients, that he seemed absolutely less interested than the lawyer. "Yes, I'm here, and, I guess my soul, I don't exactly know why."

"You told me of certain papers you had discovered," said the lawyer suggestively.

"Oh, yes," returned Thatcher, his voice slightly vague. "I've got them somewhere about me." He began to feel in his coat pocket for the—the—stuff, by the way, this is a rather dreary and tight forsaken sort of place. Let's go into Washington and have something at the expense of a bottle of champagne."

"After I've look at those papers you wanted to show me, myself," said Harlowe, "and as for the champagne—well I know this apple other room. I'm dry. At present I want to have my head clear, and yours too if you're going to make a fool of yourself in my presence in my chambers."

Thatcher dragged Harlowe's heavy, revolving desk chair, which never before had been removed from its sacred position, to the fire, and began to peel the cover off [illegible]

Home Evidence

No other preparation has won success at home equal to Hood's Sarsaparilla. In Lowell, Mass., where it is made, it is now, as it has been for years, the leading medicine for purifying the blood and toning and strengthening the system. This "good name at home" is "a tower of strength at [illegible]"

It would require a volume to print all Lowell people have said in favor of Hood's Sarsaparilla. Mr. Albert Estes, living at 28 East Pine Street, Lowell, for 15 years employed as boss carpenter by J. W. Bennett, president of the Erie Telephone Company, had a large running sore come on his leg which troubled him a year, which he ascribed to his blood. He took Hood's Sarsaparilla. The sore grew less in size, and in a short time disappeared.

Jos. Dunphy, 214 Central Street, Lowell, had swellings and lumps on his face and neck, which Hood's Sarsaparilla completely cured.

Mrs. C. W. Morrison, wife of the Deputy Assistant Fire Engineer of Lowell, says that for 10 years she was troubled with stomach disorder and sick headache, which nothing relieved. The attacks came on every Saturday night, when she was obliged to lie on her bed and was unable to endure any noise. She took Hood's Sarsaparilla, and after a time the attacks ceased entirely.

Many more might be given had we room. On the recommendation of people of Lowell, who know us, we ask you to try

SIXTY YEARS IN WASHINGTON

The name of Ben Perley Poor has been for more than half a century one of the best known in the country. As journalist, correspondent, Clerk of the Senate printing records, editor of the Congressional directory and philosopher and friend to every newspaper man who has sojourned at Washington for his copy, Mr. Poore has kept himself in the front and the memory of all connected with or interested in that public life which centers in and about the capital. Naturally, therefore, his long promised "Reminiscences, Social, Anecdotal and Political, of Sixty Years in the National Metropolis," have been awaited with pleased anticipation, and the appearance of the first volume will be hailed as a genuine literary and political event.

Perley, as he is best known, is the one man in Washington or the country who could write such a book. There may be others whose experience covers as many years, but they lack the gifts of observation, perception, appreciation and narrative skill, there may be others with the gifts, but they lack the experience. It is the rare combination of experience and unusual capacity to utilize and reconstruct it for the public benefit which gives Perley his special, his unique fitness for the work he has performed. And it is not with what has passed on the surface alone that he is familiar. That commonplace of his with its fast whitening thatch of curling locks has been made the repository of more secret history, political and social, than many a skull in the land could hold without bursting. He has been emphatically "behind the scenes" in Washington, where the machines were worked, wires pulled and traps set, and he does not, of all he knows of the hidden things as hitherto he does not, being a man of honor—he throws a vast flood of light upon some things which have been counted heretofore as among the mysteries.

Pithy Notices

Every chapter abounds with sparkling wit, pleasing anecdotes, bright pictures of social life, political revelations and happy comments. * * When he describes men, women and events in his graphic and forcible style, we can but admire his cheerful humor, his soundness of judgment, his freedom from prejudice, and his quickness of perception. Going through the book, from a Democratic to administration, we are pleased with a narration with a splendor of diction and a vividness of illustration rarely equaled.—Boston Budget.

Maj. Perley Poore has devoted himself to the preparation of a book that will be welcomed in every American home. He is not only a bright and cheerful writer, but he writes for the fireside. His book will be free from every objectionable feature, and will give no offense to the most considerate. Fine illustrations, photographs and text, has make the work especially valuable as an addition to the library.—Albany Evening Journal.

Maj. Ben. Perley Poore is a journalist of such long standing that the history of the present generation of journalists stops far short of the beginning of his career. He has known nearly all the public men of the United States during the last three quarters of a century, personally, and many of them intimately. The motives and purposes of parties and party leaders have been to him an open book for many years. * * The "reminiscences" proper of the veteran journalist began in 1828 with James Gordon Bennett's appearance in Washington as the correspondent of the New York "Enquirer."—Chicago Mail.

Maj. Ben Perley Poore, the author of the work, is one of the ablest and most versatile of journalists, whose long career and intimate relations with public men have furnished him with stores of anecdote and reminiscence. * * Maj. Poore's life in Washington extends over half a century, during which time he has been an alert observer and an accurate and entertaining reporter of everything that passed under his eyes at the national Capital. Few men, whose opportunities for observation have not been so good or so numerous as his, realize what changes have taken place in these five decades in material, social and political affairs.—Boston Evening Herald.

A NEW BURIAL CASKET

The present barbarous or unsatisfactory mode of burial is engaging the attention of all classes. Nothing in [illegible] ing as the disposal of the sacred remains of those we have loved and lost. Nothing marks the character of a people as their method or manner of disposing of the dead. The earliest ancient form of burial was in caves or the excavement of the bodies of the dead in baked earth or stone. Next the Egyptian practice of embalming the body. The Greeks and [illegible] and entombed their ashes in urns or vessels made of terra cotta. The ancient Danes, Irish and English buried their dead in stone coffins, mounds or in stone mounds. The early scriptural history frequently mentions the first three methods. All ancient as well as the modern civilized races have shown great veneration and respect for their dead, and a desire to preserve their remains as long as possible. The respect felt by the living for their dead prompted the building of the pyramids and the erection of some of the grandest buildings, tombs and temples in the world.

At a recent meeting of the Association of Science, held at Buffalo, the substitution of cremation for cremating the bodies of our dead was advocated, as this plan would overcome all sanitary and other objectionable features, and would not interfere with the ritual of the churches. Bishop Cox, Episcopalian, and Bishop Ryan, Catholic, both declare themselves heartily in favor of it.

The theory advanced by these gentlemen has already been anticipated by the Indestructible Casket Co., of Chicago. They are now manufacturing these composition cement caskets. They are without doubt superior to the ancient sarcophagi in which the mortal remains of monarchs and other dignitaries have been placed, and they are made at a price that brings them within the reach of rich and poor alike. The composition cement of which they are made is but stone or clay reduced to dust by a process of decomposition, and from which all perishable mineral or vegetable matter has been eliminated. The purer cements are those from which this elimination has been most perfect. They are imported from England and Germany, and will stand a terrible pressure of 400 pounds to the inch. The ancient viaducts of Athens and the Colyseum and Catacombs of Rome are evidences of the indestructibility of cement.

Mr J. S. Kinney has secured the agency for these caskets for the townships of Tecumseh, Clinton and Manchester, and will keep a full assortment of them constantly in stock. People should call there and inspect them. In addition to being absolutely indestructible, they are sold at a reasonable price, which will bring them within the reach of persons of moderate means.

NORTHERN LENAWEE FARMER'S CLUB

Wednesday evening, Feb. 2nd, the Northern Lenawee Farmers Club met at J. F. N. Bowen's, being the first regular meeting of this club. Long before the time for commencing the exercises of the evening there was "standing room only," such a crowd having collected to take part in the exercises. It was estimated that there were one hundred and fifty persons present. The literary part of the program was carried out with slight changes according to the program, attained with some difficulty on account of the crowded condition of the house. The question came up for discussion, "Which pays the best for the money invested, poultry or cows," led by C. H. Keyser, followed by gentlemen Sec. Bowen, Hoag and others. The drift of sentiment seemed to favor poultry on a small scale, but to branch out and invest the capital that there was in cows, that it would not pay in proportion that it did now.

Club adjourned to meet at O. P. Remington's, Feb 16th, when the following program is expected to be carried out.

Music. Mrs. A. Welch and Mrs. A. Wells.

Recitation. Lulu Taylor.

Select Reading. Mrs. J. F. N. Bowen.

Music. Keyser and Wood.

Chip basket—C. H. Keyser.

Acting charade. By three ladies and three gentleman.

Question—Which pays the best to fatten stock on grass or dry feed.

TEMPERANCE COLUMN.

Edited by a Committee of the W. C. T. U.

THE TEMPERANCE QUESTION.

Never before in the history of the world did the temperance reform attract so much attention or assume so [illegible] majority of the American people are decidedly for temperance if only they could be united in their aims and work. Time will be required to effectuate this. Reforms move slowly. First crystallize. Solidity of conviction that intemperance is the curse of the earth will, in time, result in a generally acceptable method for its removal. That time is not quite yet, but it is coming. Every person has formed an idea of the best course to pursue. Strange that opinion is so various. One is for license on the theory that it is better to restrict an evil which can not be wiped out than to let it go swerving on as it will. Another is for prohibition, first, last and always, and will have none of the license fallacy. The prohibitionists number a great army, but they, too, are divided as to ways and means. Some declare that prohibition can never be realized through a political party, for in order to be effective the movement must be popular. It might be pertinent to inquire of such whether a political prohibition party would not be popular if it should gain the majority of votes and sweep the field? Other prohibitionists maintain that only by a party behind it to make it effective can prohibition ever prohibit. They argue that the weakness of the prohibitory laws in the past has been in the fact that there was no political party organized to look after that special issue and keep it alive. They insist that until whiskey selling becomes as odious to the public as theft, murder, or other such crimes, there must be an organization and a platform embodying the prohibition principle and electing men for the very purpose of executing prohibition laws. Many years ago we heard arguments of this kind and saw something of the form of a prohibition party rising into view. Whether it was born before its time we know not, but it is certain that other exciting questions have held the public mind in pretty close attention to the two existing and dominant parties, so that all new political agitators up to a recent period have shared just about the same fate. But the old issues are dead or dying, while the prohibition question is aglow with life. Even saloonists and liquor dealers generally concede the liveliness of the temperance campaign. However men may view the new party phase of the prohibition question they cannot close their eyes to the question itself. Churches are speaking out upon it. Great leaders in educational and philanthropic institutions are taking their stand on one side or the other. The old parties are coming on this line. We now have republicans, pure and simple, and anti saloon republican Democrats as such are professedly opposed to what they term "sumptuary laws," but there are thousands of Christian democrats who are opposed to this opposition. We are now noting facts as they exist, not pleading for anything. As a Christian newspaper, we hate the saloons and everything which tends to support them. We become impatient even of saloon toleration. It is time to act in some way; time that Christian men were all aroused. Let Christian republicans vote the republican ticket if they wish to do so, but let them insist that that ticket shall be anti-saloon. Let democrats vote the democratic ticket if they prefer to, but let them demand that the ticket shall express a temperance sentiment. If it be replied that this cannot be done, we say that these Christian voters should be the first to know it. A Christian man, whether greenbacker, democrat, republican, or prohibitionist, should know the significance of his ballot, and if he cannot cast it so that it will express his convictions and tend to suppress evil, this fact should arouse him as to his connections. This is the very point expressed in our Methodist Discipline. Without presuming to dictate to Methodists as to their political affiliations the opinion is expressed that our people should not permit themselves to be controlled by party organizations managed in the interests of the liquor traffic. Let every member of our Church study this question. Consider first, what your party affiliations are; secondly, whether your party is managed in the interests of the liquor traffic; thirdly, whether by voting with that party you are helping to prolong the reign of rum; fourthly, whether there is really any good reason to hope for a change in the temperance of your party, during your life time, upon this prohibition question. Be honest with yourself. Break away from your old prejudices and precedents for a moment, and on your knees before God, ask Him to direct you in the matter. [illegible] Lady. COMING.

The Boston Star Company, Thursday, Feb 17th 1887. This is one of the best musical companies that ever visited Tecumseh. We have often been asked why we did not get more first class attractions. There would be no difficulty in procuring them if they were sure of good houses. We have had good companies here that were poorly patronized, which has discouraged them from ever coming again. So now let us have a full house and we will give you an entertainment that Tecumseh ought to be proud of, and we will try to book other attractions of equal merit in the future. N. M. SUTTON, Manag'r.

P. S. The above company receives $175 at Adrian Friday evening, Feb 18, their regular fee.

The second February number of Scribner's Magazine opens with an article of general and scholarly interest, entitled, "The Likenesses of Julius Cæsar," by Mr. John C. Ropes, the well known writer of military history, which is authoritatively illustrated with eighteen portraits, reproductions of photographs from statues. These photographs are from the absolutely unique and complete collection of the likenesses of Cæsar, owned by Mr. Ropes, and the completion of which he has made his especial study for many years. One of these portraits, engraved by W. H. Closson, forms a striking tête-de-page for the paper.

Depty Sheriff Aten has two very curious pocket pieces. One is a dollar bill issued by the Erie & Kalamazoo Railroad bank dated Aug. 1, 1853, and the other is a fifty dollar Confederate note which bears date Feb. 17th, 1861. He obtained the latter from a friend in New York twenty three years ago and has carried it ever since, and they will both do to keep.

Here is something it won't cost much to try. A merchant is reported as saying that "the way to keep your windows from being enameled with frost is to rub them once or twice a week with a rag dipped in glycerine. I have found this to be the only way to keep my show windows clean. The discovery has been worth many dollars to me, but I don't mind letting the cat out of the bag."

One of the remarkable things in the February Harper's is the masterly handling of the subject of short stories by the greatest living American novelist. W. D. Howells fills his department, the "Editor's Study," with a consideration of the art of writing short stories, the reasons of its marvellous recent development, and why Americans excel in that branch of literature. The most conspicuous examples of short story writers are mentioned, with a running comment on their special merits.

From a recent number of the Salem Era, published at Salem, Ohio, we clip the following: "The most important news we have to chronicle this week is the nuptials last Saturday of one of our fair maidens to S. A. Stevenson, of Kansas. The western gentleman, although a stranger among us, comes well recommended and presents a fine appearance. He has although in the face of his good reports, caused the Friends to realize again that there are other ways of uniting the bonds than the peculiar manner prescribed by their creed. He has not only taken one of the sisters from the fold, but expects to take from our society a prize, and thus we lose out novel kind, hearted and respected friend, Mary Allen. The groom was a former resident of Raisin township, where he has many and friends who will heartily congratulate him on his good fortune.

Daniel Ludlum, one of the oldest residents of this village, died at his home in Brownville last Sunday. He was buried Tuesday.

The Kindergarten Association will meet at the residence of Mrs. C. A. Wright, Tuesday next, at three o'clock P. M. All are cordially invited to be present.

A bridge is down on the M. & O. road near the county line. Passengers are transferred, but no freight trains have run since Tuesday from Toledo. The Lake Shore also refuses freight at Toledo on account of the high water.

It was about three weeks ago that Mrs. Wm. Myers slipped and fell, and as she then thought suffered no serious consequences. She has been doing her housework since the same as ever until Saturday last, when she complained of being in great pain, and a doctor was called in, who pronounced one of her ribs broken on the right side, the result of the fall.

Grand Military and musical entertainment. The Tecumseh Light Guard, Tecumseh City Band and Hubbard & Macham's orchestra will give an exhibition drill, and another of those popular band concerts to be followed by a social pop, for the benefit of Sergeant Wm. Moir, Opera House, Wednesday eve., Feb. 16, 1887. Admission to Gallery, 15c. Let everybody come.

"Trixie" was greeted with a small audience at the opera house, Tuesday evening, but it was no less appreciative. The play is a light comedy which is really the best part of it. Miss Jessie Bonestecle as "Trixie" is an extremely vivacious young lady of great musical abilities as well as a talent for dancing and keeps the audience interested to the end. They should pay Tecumseh another visit.

Evans Creek and the River Raisin were on a big bender last Tuesday. The two days' rain brought on the biggest flood that this town has seen in several years. Abner Wilson says the Creek was the highest he ever saw it. The Globe pond, receiving the water of both creek and river was filled to the brim, but the surplus water was let off without producing any damage. The flats South of the Globe Mill, from Chicago street to the M. & O. railroad bridge were entirely inundated.

We hope to see a large attendance next Wednesday evening at the entertainment to be given for the benefit of Sergeant Wm. Moir. "Billy" has long been a worthy member of Co. C. He has been a steady, exemplary young man, and a faithful employee. For many years he has been the principal support of a widowed mother, and his long illness has depleted his finances. His present needy condition appeals to the sympathy of every one. His comrades, together with the band and orchestra, get up this entertainment for his benefit, and it should result in a well filled purse for Billy Moir.

CAPT. FRED B. WOOD.

The Ministers' Union, of Tecumseh, at its meeting last Monday, considered the recent action of the Legislature in submitting the "prohibitory amendment" to the people. The members expressed their unanimous approval of the submission; pledged themselves to do all in their power to secure the success of the amendment, and took steps looking towards inaugurating a series of meetings for the support and promotion of the measure at the coming election. It is hoped that all the temperance sentiment of our community of all parties will be united and aroused an consolidated in one earnest practical effort to secure a result we all so much desire.

F. ADKINS, Sec.

THE BAND BENEFIT.

"It was the best masque ball ever given in the Opera House," was the universal opinion expressed at the close of the dance last Friday evening by those who participated. The program opened shortly before eight o'clock with a few instrumental selections by the band, and at nine o'clock the procession of maskers filed on to the floor in the grand march. The march was led by the burlesque band which was "just immense," and the balance of the procession did credit to the van guard. Two quadrilles and two round figures were danced before the removal of the masques and during that period the spectators in the galleries had ample time to inspect the nondescript figures on the floor, to compare notes and record their guesses as to who was who. Innumerable guesses were doubtless made and it is true that but few of them were correct. The disguises were very perfect.

There were many noticable characters aside from the "burlesque band," but as it was utterly impossible to make a catalogue of all of them, we refrain from particularizing. The music of the orchestra was first class and was quite a surprise, showing that all we need, to have an excellent orchestra, is to cultivate the home talent, which we have right at hand. Every available seat in the gallery was occupied and even standing room was at a discount. The galleries were partially cleared after the removal of the disguises, but the dancers remained and enjoyed the merry tripping until the "wee sma' hours" admonished them that Saturday morning was near at hand. And one of the most satisfactory features of the affair was the fact that over fifty dollars were realized to replenish the band treasury, which was a very acceptable fact.

Prohibition County Convention.

The Prohibitionists of Lenawee County will hold a convention at Hemlock Corners, Adrian, on Saturday Feb. 19, 1887, at 2 o'clock p. m. for the purpose of electing county delegates to attend the State Convention to be held at Lansing on the 24th inst. Each township and ward will be entitled to the usual representation.

G. P. WARNER, Chairman.
P. E. CHASE, Secretary.

CLIPPINGS AND CONDENSATIONS.

The scholars of the West Blissfield school have organized a lyceum.

The Apollo Orchestra [illegible] will give a phantom party on Feb. 21st.

Judge Howell is rapidly regaining his health, and will be able to open Court within a week or two.

The proprietors of the Morenci Observer have purchased a new power press and will soon enlarge the paper.

Some "pure ground coffee" analyzed in New York, was found to contain "[illegible] and was adulterated with seven different ingredients." It was a favorite brand with hotels and restaurants.

The young ladies of Adrian are said to be the most accomplished musicians, those of Hillsdale of the most domestic turn of mind. Hudson girls have no one characteristic that shines brighter than another. They are like a beautiful garment which delights the eye yet is such a complete and beautiful arrangement of colors and forms that it is impossible to determine what particular part it is that pleases you.—Hudson Gazette.

The railroad company with which Hudson has held negotiations, is also negotiating with other places as it appears from this item in the Detroit News of Thursday: "A letter has been received at Portland from J. Marble, president of the Cincinnati, Jackson & Mackinaw railroad, in which he states that if the country from West Unity, Ohio, to Elm Hall, Mich., via Marshall and Coldwater, will furnish the company a free right of way on the old grades, and $6,000 per mile, local aid, he will advise his company to proceed with the construction of the road."

Here is an item that may prove of interest and value to some of our merchants: A recent decision of the supreme court says that no city or town has a right to license a man to sell any wares or merchandise in front of another man's property. The street in front of his property or place of business is held to be one of the appurtenances thereto and for the especial use of the owner only, against the right of all others, excepting to travel therein. This decision will result in shutting off street venders and hawkers unless they can arrange matters with the owners of the property before which they expose their wares for sale.

A week or two ago a Hudson clerk went to a party, and as well regulated clerks do, accompanied his best girl home. Another party came on the same trail, when the clerk's girl reached home the four went in. After a while the folks heard a great racket, followed by a dead calm. Later it leaked out that the clerk had fainted, fell to the floor and been tenderly revived by the lady. In common with the rest of the community we extend our hearty congratulations to the clerk for the fortunate termination of the occurrence, but hope that in life's journey when he grows faint by the wayside there may always be some fair one near, feeling assured that whenever she comes to the rescue, he will "come to."—Hudson Post.

The latest society craze is known and described as the "donkey party." With zepher, Germantown, etc., the outline of a donkey is made on canvas. The strange creature is complete, save that his tail is detached. This tail is the cause of all the misery in the party. The canvass is hung upon the wall. The object of the game is to see who can place the detached tail nearest the point where it can do the most good in fly-time, the operator to be blindfolded while performing the feat of engrafting. The nice young man or young woman who comes nearest to affixing the tail is awarded a prize. Hilarious fun is produced by the "donkey party," which is supposed to fill a long felt want in social circles.

PLEASE NOTE.—A change of time goes into effect Jan. 26th on the Detroit, Mackinac & Marquette railroad, and connections at all points are maintained, at Mackinac City, via the staunch transfer steamer Algonquin from St. Ignace with the Michigan Central and Grand Rapids & Indiana railroads for all points in Canada east, south east and south. The ice in the Straits of Mackinac is in excellent condition this winter, and the boat is having no trouble in making regular trips, while from the fact that the strands are frozen evenly and soundly no trouble is apprehended, the boat being able to maintain a channel, though in view of the fact that she goes steadily through solid twenty four inches in thickness when occasion demands, it will be understood that the closing of her channel would be but temporary delay. At Marquette connection is made with the Chicago, Milwaukee & Lake Michigan railroad which runs through to the copper country, as heretofore. The Marquette Sport Line, which is left to navigate as the position is exceedingly hazardous, the business of the territory tributary to Marquette is such as to warrant the outlay, as profitable.

HEATING THE SCHOOL BUILDINGS.

EDITOR OF HERALD.—I beg leave to take some exceptions to the statements made in your editorial of last week's issue entitled "A visit to the West School." I would not value my own opinion if it were given on so slight an examination as the time and opportunity offered. Nor do I wish my name to be used to the prejudice of my fellow citizens who are engaged in the furnace business. The rooms were comfortable, but it was not a cold day and the building being only one story, well constructed, with hollow walls, is certainly not a fair place to test the Janitor's statement that in the month of January he used five and three-eighths cords of wood and a ton of soft coal down per week, a very economical use of fuel, especially when you consider that the rooms are to be comfortably warmed only from 9 a. m. to 4 p. m., not a third of a day, and for only five days in the week. Less than 1½ full days per month, and the fuel equivalent to a cord of wood for twenty-four hours. I did not concede that the plan presented by the members of the Board would be well adapted to heat properly the Central Building. The Central has a floor area over two times that of the West Branch. Walls cracked, sash loose in the window frames and three stories in height, it stands four square to all the winds that blow. I agree with you in the statement that "The present arrangement heats the building so poorly as to destroy the comfort and endanger the health of pupils and teachers." That is the truth, an awful truth. It is a catarrh and consumption breeding institution. I hope every one who has children attending will follow your advice and visit it. One error in its construction has made it impossible to warm, or ventilate the building properly. The ventilating flues are of no certain use. Instead of drawing off the impure air from the floors they let in cold air, which flows over the floor, chilling the children's feet, forcing the impure air upward to be inhaled and preventing in a great degree the inflow of warm air from the furnaces. The flues are useless because in by world would not work well under such conditions.

Had the flues been built in the partition walls and connected with a ventilating shaft and using the chimney, a device in common use for many years, the ventilation would have been good, the furnaces far more durable and effective, and the hygienic conditions of the rooms vastly improved.

But the ventilating shafts are not the only fault. Button up your coat and we will go below. Whew! don't the cold air sweeping up from the basement take your breath away? Heroes of ventilation or inhalation with a vengeance. Look at the broken lights, the top sashes dropped out of place and rattling in their frames, the big hole under the door and the four large openings in the wall poorly covered by rough boards. Don't imagine that you are in some deserted tenement building. This is the High School Building and there is the Janitor with his overcoat on shoving wood into the furnace. Pretty cold place this, Mr. Turner. "Yes, yes, I can't keep warm when not at work without my overcoat."

Poor fellow! My sympathies are deeply moved. Not for him but for the two hundred or more children whose feet day after day rest upon the cold floor above, and I cannot but feel indignant that the plainest practical duties, such as no housekeeper would neglect in order to make his family comfortable, have been neglected this winter in the care and management of the Central Building.

TWISTLETON, Q. C.

Many strange things have happened to me in my life that my friends could never account for. They could never understand the beginning of my introduction to Twistleton, Q. C., nor why that learned [illegible] work for him for a time without putting [illegible] suddenly, used his influence to secure for me the important and valuable junior practice in my hands.

Twistleton, Q. C., was a hard, selfish man, [illegible] old fashioned, whiskered [illegible] of wigs. It was [illegible] of the Court of Chancery, [illegible] of the Court of Appeal, [illegible] possibly of issue estimate and fame was enhanced by great success. When Twistleton married Lady Frances [illegible] Barndore, the Traverses were [illegible] off, as they pretended to be, [illegible] as we all know, made his [illegible] a year, and had, if anything, an ever increasing practice in the chancery [illegible].

Twistleton was no bad fellow, a great favorite and a man of strong common sense, but he had two faults. He was a believer in ghosts and he wrote everything in his chambers upon a Remington typewriter.

Twistleton and his wife were staying one June in Norfolk, at Lady Barndore's. Twistleton was due in town to argue the great patent case, concerning sewing machines, of Buncombe and another vs. Badger, in the court of appeal, on Wednesday morning. I expected him back in chambers on the Monday evening, understanding that he intended resuming his work at the end of the week, for this case would last at least three days, and Twistleton was in several other cases on the list.

A week's work, on Monday evening I [illegible] at my club and was engaged in [illegible] Twistleton's papers when [illegible] long and [illegible] Twistleton's own [illegible] breakfast a chop and [illegible] Accordingly, having heard what Foss [illegible] I [illegible] Foss [illegible] Then he summoned [illegible] windows, which I had opened to [illegible] fresh air there was in Old [illegible] carefully closed the door, let him [illegible] the hard chair in front of his writing table and fell bowed over the papers which were before him. At length [illegible] was forced to close. Foss [illegible] and Twistleton broke the silence.

"Pardon, my dear fellow, I'm [illegible]."

Twistleton, I may here remark, was always on the best of terms with me and treated me as a friend, for I believe I was useful to him. I had made great way in his affection by solemnly advising him to marry Miss Travers when I saw he was bent on doing so, but, since his marriage, I am not sure that this course of conduct [illegible] altogether to my advantage. I looked to him for a further explanation, which I saw was coming.

"Pardon, my dear fellow, who do you think is at Lady Barndore's?"

I shook my head, being entirely in ignorance.

"Charley Colston," replied Twistleton, trying to curve his whiskers with the paper knife. "Charley Colston."

"Dear, Charley Colston," it was well known that he had paid his addresses to pretty Mrs. Twistleton in former days, and report said she had encouraged them. No wonder Twistleton was excited. I knew him to be of an extremely jealous nature.

"Now, mark me, Penrose," said Twistleton, shaking his finger at me as he would at Lord Usher at the appeal court, "what luck poor Jeffery had when I was playing tennis! The whole time, sir, he and she were talking and chatting together and laughing—yes, laughing! Perhaps at my play, for I played abominably. I know it. I could not bear to see them."

Twistleton's tennis was never first rate. He had begun to play too late in life. He was an amazing partner, as he always insisted on scolding, taking all the difficult strokes and telling it them. He was a still more obstreperous opponent, as he was always raising technical objections on points of practice, still, however badly one plays, it is not pleasant to be laughed at by one's wife. I tried to soothe Twistleton, but he interrupted me.

"Everyone is another point I desire to speak to you about. Twistleton always spoke as though [illegible] the court of appeal. [illegible] refused. What do [illegible] of the [illegible]?"

"[illegible]," I answered. "[illegible] and you are going [illegible] I think [illegible] Penrose, I hope I am [illegible] Twistleton, mournfully, "[illegible] them—I did," and Twistleton [illegible].

Here the subject dropped and we [illegible] Twistleton's procedure at breakfast, which was more extraordinary to me than his strange appearance. The egg he was eating [illegible] manifestly a bad one, a most portentous fact to me, who remember hearing Twistleton—who never knew any criminal law—seriously tell the boy from the Clock that he believed a bill of attainder meant [illegible] a hard egg. What did it all mean? I looked at the paper in my hand, on it were, two words, clearly printed, "Charley Colston."

I stared blankly at Twistleton. What did it mean? Twistleton was shaking [illegible].

"Do you believe in ghosts?" he asked, [illegible] I replied.

"[illegible]," he asked, [illegible]. "There are more things in heaven and earth, that are dreamed of in your philosophy." This was the only quotation Twistleton ever made, that did not come from the law reports. I believe he picked up the phrase he had invented in his early youth when he first began to believe in ghosts.

"If you don't believe in ghosts, who wrote that message on my typewriter?"

Twistleton's manner was very impressive. I felt like a witness committing perjury.

"I tell you, I found it this morning when I went to write a letter just before breakfast. Who wrote it?" he shouted. "Who wrote it? I will know."

"Perhaps Foss," I suggested.

"He has not been here, and can't use the typewriter."

I heard him say so, but did not believe it. Foss was afraid of overworking himself and so did not choose to learn it, but any fool could use it if he liked to learn. My opinion was that Foss could use it. He was like the monkeys, who, as the negro said, "could talk if they would, but knew if they did they would be made to work."

"How about the laundress?" I suggested.

"Ah, the laundress," repeated Twistleton, thoughtfully, "the laundress."

So Mrs. Buttick, the laundress, was sent for when Foss came in, but she denied all knowledge of the typewriter or the writing, making a new suggestion, which I had not, of course, thought of, and gave the solution of the mystery, and that was that the paper was thrown [illegible].

"It is a message," said Twistleton mysteriously, "a message."

"Nonsense," I said. "Some fool who has strolled in and written the name for fun."

"Pooh," said Twistleton, indignantly.

"Pooh!" And then, more quickly, "No, I am sure of it—it is a message."

Very little of Buncombe vs. Badger could I get into Twistleton's head that day. Plans and specifications he seemed not to understand, the technical literary style of the individual had no charm for him. He could only gaze at the paper in his hand and muttering over and anon, "A message."

I saw it was best to humor him, and at my suggestion the typewriter was locked up that night, and he took the key with him into his bedroom. We had had a rattling good dinner together, and when I left Twistleton he was in much better spirits.

"If the ghost comes to-night he won't be able to get at the typewriter, anyhow," I said, laughing.

"Hush! I don't know," replied Twistleton, solemnly. "It is no jesting subject."

I went my way, wondering how a man with Twistleton's practice could believe in ghosts, and who the deuce had written Charley Colston's name on the typewriter.

The next morning I walked down to Twistleton's direct by after breakfast. I found him in the wildest imaginable condition. He had taken every precaution, locking up the typewriter, placing the key under his pillow, and yet here was the message as he called it, printed in confusing style, "Charley Colston." He is with your wife, Charley Colston."

"I must go, I must go. Oh! Penrose, what shall I do?" he cried in agony, as I entered the room.

"Go!" I said, "and who is to lead in Buncombe vs. Badger?"

He was silent, and buried all of his face except his whiskers in his hands. Even his hands, large and uncouth as they were, could not contain his whiskers.

"This Kof Wrigson & Clame. What will they say?" I urged, seeking the effect that my words had on him. "They rely on you in this case."

The name of this eminent firm seemed to [illegible] Twistleton to some extent.

"My dear Penrose," he said in a trembling voice, "there is a [illegible] I am sure of it. [illegible] I will [illegible] by my shoals."

"Twistleton, you speak like a [illegible] coward at home," said I, seizing him by the hand, [illegible] "If it is a message, I dodge it to-night. I will not lose what we will do. We will watch the expected [illegible]."

[illegible] with great [illegible] and [illegible] some brandy and water [illegible] the temper for [illegible] Buncombe against Badger [illegible] Twistleton [illegible] the appeal court. It was [illegible] nothing else to do, and we [illegible] Twistleton [illegible] a little [illegible] up a sweet [illegible] he won [illegible] Lady Frances [illegible] Twistleton [illegible] at intervals varying between [illegible] and ten or three minutes [illegible] the most [illegible] went to keep the court of appeal in order and frighten their lordships into deciding in his favor. On noticing this Lord Usher began to chaff and rally Twistleton in a manner that was the amusement of the junior bar, the two lords justices and not least of all, of the master of the rolls himself. At length Twistleton, on explaining on the merits of Buncombe vs. [illegible] the question addressed to him as a speculation.

When Lord Usher sank with a [illegible] of typewriters, no doubt Mr. Twistleton would have been called as a specialist to give evidence, and would not have been arguing the case before them. At [illegible] the court which knew of Twistleton's [illegible] and his lordship's [illegible] before they [illegible] a moment or two, and then, [illegible] and looked angry. But Twistleton's temper over this [illegible] he forgiving [illegible] that they court did not want to hear him, and intimated his intention if such was the case of sitting down. And then the whole court was really quite silent for a minute or two, in anticipation of a row, and every one ceased to fidget, and paid close attention to Lord Usher, to hear him, with his blandest and most urbane of smiles, explaining how it was the great privilege of that court to listen to Mr. Twistleton, and what a high value they set upon that privilege, and how it was quite inconceivable to him (Lord Usher) that he, Mr. Twistleton, could imagine for a moment that this court or any other court should wish him to sit down. Whereupon Twistleton murmured that his lordship was very good, meaning thereby that he should like to be with his lordship in a small room where he could give him a bit of his mind. Then the case proceeded quite regularly, until Twistleton handed Lord Usher a lot of papers to explain his case, and Lord Usher coming to one, said, with a knowing side glance at Smugg, L. J., that, from the handwriting, it must be a note of Mr. Twistleton's in another case, as he did not know that any one of the name of Charles Colston was a party to this case. And what would have happened then I don't know, only the court rose for lunch.

I heard two or three people say that day that "Twistleton, poor fellow, was doing more work than he ought to," that Twistleton was a clever fellow, but he could not afford to burn the candle at both ends. Indeed, Twistleton's strange conduct in Buncombe vs. Badger was the general topic of conversation in the robing room.

When Twistleton came out of court I had the greatest difficulty to prevent him rushing down to Norfolk by the night train. He was sure it was true, he believed in the message. I calmed him down and we had dinner together at my club. He had to continue his speech in the morning. I tried to coach him in Buncombe vs. Badger, but it was of no avail. I do not think he ever knew for which side he was appealing.

We agreed that we would sit up in watches and so keep our eye on the typewriter all night. There was a sofa in the recess of the window, and Twistleton sent me to bed and placed himself on this. I bade him good night and took his bed for the first half of the night. About 2 o'clock in the morning I awoke and went to Twistleton. He was wide awake, reading some papers on the sofa.

"Have you seen anything?" I asked.

"Nothing whatever," he replied.

"Nor heard anything?"

"Not a sound."

We took the lamp to the typewriter and opened it. There was the sheet of paper as he always left it, untouched. Twistleton locked it up again and took the key.

"Put it under your pillow."

"I will," he replied. "It's very good of you to sit up like this."

"It's nothing at all, I assure you," I answered.

"Keep strict watch, won't you?"

"I promise you."

Twistleton shook me by the hand with emotion and went out. He looked very ill and worried. I thought, and I was sorry for him. Was it a ghost's message, or what, that was making his life a burden to him? Should I solve the mystery to-night?

I waited about an hour and a half. The dawn came peeping through the painted shutters and made the lamp look dim. I was almost dozing—in fact, I had shut my eyes and lost consciousness for perhaps a minute perhaps more. A sharp clicking sound awoke me. It was the typewriter. There, seated on a chair in front of it, playing nimbly on the queer instrument, was a white, misty figure. It had finished. It closed the cover down and turned the key. It glided [illegible] the door and I saw the face and whiskers I knew so well. It was, Twistleton, himself.

My first impulse was to wake him, but I had heard it was dangerous to wake persons walking in their sleep. He wanted all the sleep he could get, so I decided to let him alone, to wait down to my own chambers and get some more rest myself. When I got into Old Square I could not help roaring with laughter. It was too funny. The idea of old Twistleton writing messages to himself on the typewriter and being frightened out of his wits by them. What a story to tell against him. Never, though, believe it was too good to be true.

I awoke at little late the next morning, but went straight down to Old Square by one breakfast. Alas! I was too late. There was Foss in mourning and a [illegible] of Twistleton. He had [illegible] Remember, through time [illegible] the [illegible] Clame. Here was the [illegible]

"Not down yet," replied Lord Barndore.

Twistleton looked hastily round, as though [illegible]

then tore up stairs to his wife's room. The whole company looked at each other in silence.

There was some explanation about breakfast, but the Twistletons never went into [illegible] and Mrs. Twistleton [illegible] all that day. It is true Twistleton was moody and shut himself up a good deal. Crimbleton told me that he never understood the whole business in the end, to wit, in Twistleton's single [illegible] a nine days' wonder. By the bye, I should forget to mention that Charley Colston got Barndore to be married in [illegible].

When Twistleton turned to Old Square he was a sadder and a wiser man. He gave up [illegible] and did not [illegible] but he [illegible] that Twistleton [illegible] the matter go any further, and I mentioned at the time that he might get into the house of lords, where, through Twistleton's clear arguments, Lord Usher and Lords Justices Smugg and Submarine were overruled.

That year, mostly through Twistleton's influence, my fee book credited me with £2,000.

I have kept my secret well, but since Twistleton succeeded Lord Usher as master of the rolls, Lady Twistleton has not called on Mrs. Penrose, and although my wife assures me that she is rather glad of it, she is always telling me now that she does not think so good a story should be lost to the world as that of Twistleton's typewriter.—Cornhill Magazine.

DR. A. TRASK'S
MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All Sores, as as Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs, Inflammatory forms of disease, Erysipelas, Neuralgia, Inflammatory Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the distribution of the blood. By this means a controlling power is exercised over the most significant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years.

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that we have to space here to insert any of the numerous testimonials of cures which we have from all parts of the country. We simply ask those readers of this notice who have overcome this ointment to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Prices 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

Abraham Hare, druggist, Bessemer, Ala., says: "The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my 20 years' experience, is Electric Bitters." Thousands of others have added their testimony, so that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters do cure all diseases of the Liver, Kidneys or Blood. Only half dollar a bottle at

The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off of revenue stamps from Proprietary Medicines, no doubt has largely benefited the consumers, as well as relieving the burden of home manufactures. Especially is this the case with Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. The reduction of their six cents per dozen, has been added to increase the size of the bottles containing these remedies—thereby giving the public more medicine in the same price. The August Flower or Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, and the Cough Syrup for cough and lung troubles have perhaps, the largest sales of any medicine in the world. The advantage of the increased size of the bottles will be greatly appreciated by the sick and afflicted, in every town and village in civilized countries. Sample bottles free to users regular size 25 cents.

OUR SPLENDID GIRLS.

HOW THE YOUNG MEN OF THE DAY COMPARE WITH THEM.

Up and Down Fifth Avenue—A Magnificent Specimen of American Womanhood—The Slim, Thin Faced, Tottering Figure of a Dude—Athletics.

Some Sunday afternoon, take a walk up Fifth avenue and then down again. Make it the afternoon. At then, when the church goers have just been released from church, the pavement is so crowded that you see no more than a moving press of bonnets, while to exhibit the type and [illegible] one must see a hundred people you know on the way up and another hundred on the way down. And then, crowd along in a contingent straggling procession so that you can find time to turn if you have a nothing-to-do manner, or stop to shake hands if the relations warrant it, or just to gape and look friendly.

Gen. Sherman, Tom Ochiltree, Addison Cammack, Kyrie Belleve, the Rev. William F. Cody (the Marquis de Mores), Larry Jerome are interesting, to be sure, and suggest reflections of similarities, grave and gay, but this magnificent looking girl who swings along at a four mile gait is not only a subject for reflection, she is a theme for admiration, for congratulation, for tenderness, and the sight of her sends ten thousand new impulses through the mind and heart.

This is American womanhood.

Not the American womanhood of Washington Irving's day, when flimsy dresses were in style, which were disjointed at night to make them cling closely to the form, and when shoes with paper soles were in general favor, and the donning of them was as good as a cordial invitation to the pneumonia. No; those were the days, not only of meagre brains, but of diseased and dyspeptic stomachs, hesitating hearts, pinched chests and tottering limbs. An elegant womanhood of the past was a ghost.

A GLORIOUS SIGHT.

This is the American womanhood of today, nay, even more truly of the future, heaven be praised! Look at the rosy cheeks, the sparkling eyes, the shoulders thrown back, the firm and certain step. Notice how well nourished the cheeks are, how deep and true the inspirations, and how plump and well rounded the arms which taper down to the well gloved hands. Is it not a glorious sight? There is no chance for paper soled shoes here. Broad, substantially soled button boots cover the handsome, muscular feet, and in place of the tawdry costume whose likeness is preserved for us by dozens of old engravings, here we have a neat and well made cloth suit, which fits the contours to perfection. Can anything be more satisfactory to the eye than this picture of honest health, of alert though not perhaps of subtle intelligence and womanly beauty? There may be no suggestion of sentimentality here, nothing of what everyday novelists call poetry and there is no romantic melancholy, but, without any sacrifice of womanliness, there is grace, and, above all, there are life and strength.

But what is this? What is this slim, pony, thin faced, toddling, tottering little figure who emphasizes her shoes force of contrast the strength and the color of this girl with the gryphonal like movement?

Well, it's American manhood, or, perhaps, to be exactly just, it is one aspect of it. No, that cane is not so heavy as it looks. If it were so, this example of American manhood could not carry it. If he took his gloves off you would see a couple of heavy gold rings plitting to shame the attenuation of his fingers. His hat as you see, threatens to extinguish him. The cape of his overcoat over his narrow shoulders looks like the cape of [illegible]. Compare his dull weary eyes with the sparkling ones which dance in the girl's head. Compare their cheeks without putting them together. Look at his simering toddle and look at her stride. Compare their figures. But there is no comparison. They cannot be compared any more than rum wine and water, or the pale and sickly moon that floats the day with the resplendent queen of night.

"But," you ask, "what is all this athletic clubs whereof we hear so much? How is it that they do not serve to build up these sickly forms? The gymnasiums are resorted to. Athletics are the fashion."

THE INSIDE FACTS.

All this is true, but only true in part. The gymnasiums are resorted to, but very much as the theatres are. The youth of the day goes to see others exercise just as he goes to see others act on the stage. As a matter of theory, he knows a great deal more about jumping and running, wrestling and boxing than the youth of 1776 ever dreamed of. He is learned in technical terms and is educated as an athlete, but as a performer he is no hero. His enthusiasm for the athletics is the enthusiasm which arranges and supports parade days and marches. He pays $25 dollars for them. And when he expresses his appreciation that the man has not been lively enough, the singer retires.

"I know what you young fellows want. You want some girl yet who never heard of a kiss in a $50."

This is the tone of conversation in athletics which is rampant. It is the tone which prompts the youths who for years spend hours to stay up all night and pay $25 to discover at dawn the next morning thirty miles from home, in a warm little bed that the great fight between Jack and Tom for $5,000 a side will not take place. Information which he can buy with his morning paper for two cents. And it is this influence also which keeps the membership of the athletic clubs up to high figures. But out of every [illegible] there is a good deal of real manhood. The athletic spirit and [illegible] are [illegible] Hewitt in New York Mail and Express.

THE FEBRUARY MAGAZINE OF AMERICAN HISTORY is a model of elegance, and its contents are appetizing and delightful. The first article on the "Notable Editors between 1776 and 1800" affords twenty-seven unique illustrations, including several of the rarest portraits known to picture collectors. Its author, Hon. S. G. W. Benjamin, illumes his text with quaint anecdote and felicitous quotation, and, as the result of much scholarly research, he furnishes fresh information on a variety of points which serves to demonstrate the marvelous influence of the early American press in the shaping of our public affairs. This series of papers touches a vital cord in the life of the country, and, as the field is vast and the harvesters few, its success is assured. Nothing now running as a serial through any periodical is calculated to attract more distinguished attention or become more permanently valuable, the two chapters already published in the January and February issues are fully worth the yearly price of the magazine. No wonder this magazine has created a national taste for historical study. Published at 30 Lafayette Place, New York City.

Miss Jessie Patton as an Elocutionist is well known and her abilities need no recitation. It is of the highest order, and in her rendition of the "Maiden Martyr" and the "Spirit of Faith," last night, she was as usual perfect, and was on both occasions vociferously applauded to which she graciously responded. She recited "The Jewess' Curse" later on in magnificent manner, and the tones of bitter hate and scorn she threw into concluding part were inimitable. "The Jewess" was the last piece she gave, and it was also recited without defect. Miss Patton is an elocutionist of the highest order, and her ability is seldom eclipsed. One would think to read the last week's "Britton Eagle" that our village had been visited by a band of Western outlaws. The author of the article says that the rioters made a raid on the shoe shop and were disappointed, and then proceeded to another business house and were again disappointed as they found nothing but boxes and jars, and that for their pains their pockets made their way to a private house and boosted on a half dozen barrels of cider. The article is a good ways from the truth of the affair, as shameful and disgraceful as it was. We have spoken several who had a hand in the affair, and some who were victims of the would be rioters, and fail to learn where anything was injured in any way whatever, as they did not enter into the shoe store, or any other store either. We are sorry that in this enlightened age, that young men who have always lived in a civilized community, should be so thoughtless and heedless when they set out for a little fun, as to let their better judgment buried away in a manner that not only brings disgrace on themselves but on the community in which they live. It is hoped that the affair will be a lesson by which they may profit for the best.

FARMERS SOCIAL CLUB

Tuesday evening, Feb. 15th, the Farmers Club met at Judge Fisher's. After some extra business in regard to the institute, had been transacted the program previously arranged was carried out.

The question "Does farming pay?" was introduced by a paper by Mr. Geo. Griswold, to which he showed that farming does pay better than any other business to which we engage.

Mr. Colvin. Some men try farming and are not successful, but, some men are not successful in anything, much depends upon the man. The time has been when nearly every man could run a farm and make a living, but something more than a mere living is wanted. I think there are many drawbacks to farming, but I think the masses of farmers are happier than any other class.

Mr. Everhart. I think farming does pay when capital, economy and skill are brought in, as in other business. He must determine what his farm will best produce, and what sized farm he can make profitable. He showed by facts and figures that farming pays by comparing the products and increase in wealth of the farming states. The farmer must not let his expenses exceed his income, but he must exercise economy and skill.

Mr. Horton. I believe that farming does pay, but I believe that it can be made to pay better by changing some of the systems. I think we pasture our new seedings too much and then complain the next year, because the crop is short. If we alter this system and be as [illegible] as the grand book of farming, we can make farming pay much better.

Mr. T. D. Strong. Farming pays well as a safe investment. We hear of the millionaires and sometimes think there are many better paying investments, but we do not hear of the ninety-nine failures in one hundred. A man with vim, push and economy can make farming pay and seldom makes a failure and becomes bankrupt. A person must look well to all the leakages. One leakage is losing much of the fertility of the soil, another is neglecting to take care of the tools.

Mr. Fisher. I speak from experience that farming pays, as by surroundings show that there has been profit. I think that farming does not pay in consideration of the capital invested, as well as ten years ago, but yet, by economy and pushing it can be made to pay.

W. B. Keyser. It does pay in health; it pays socially and morally and I think it pays financially. He produced figures to show that it had paid him financially in the eight years in which he had taken his products. He thinks farmers do not credit their farms with their living as they ought.

R. B. Gillespie. I think it pays but a very small profit. It used to pay pretty well but the low compels us to show our business to the world and gives us no chance to know and attend to our business ourselves.

Philip Kelsey. Thinks it pays large profits as he knows he has steadily increasing in possessions since beginning.

Club adjourned to meet Friday evening Feb. 18th at F. C. Rector's.

ABRAHAM PLEADING FOR SODOM. April, 28, 87.

Notes. Abraham. His name has now been changed from Abram to Abraham, denoting Father of a Multitude. The city. Sodom. There were four other cities, but Lot made his home in this chief city of the plains. The site of these cities is not fully determined. It is not probable that they are under the Dead Sea, but were on its banks. It seems to be represented that they were destroyed, like Pompeii, by a volcanic eruption. Yet we cannot well dogmatize on the subject. Some have supposed that the "slime pits" or, rather, bitumen pits, were kindled by lightning. Very deep pits, or wells, are dug in the East in rock bearing bitumen to obtain it. An outrush of gas, if ignited, might have easily consumed the town, and any such phenomenon might easily have been described as raining down fire and brimstone. "The Lord went this way,"—we may if we will, identify this manifestation called the Lord, or Jehovah, with the later manifestation of God in Christ, but it is all speculative.

Intercession. Abraham drew near to the Lord when he wanted to make a special plea. It was an act of affection and pleading. He was not afraid to come close to God. He was God's friend. And yet we shall find that he had not that perfect love that casteth out all fear.

There are some things God cannot help doing. He did not have to make the world, but having thought it best to make the world, he cannot help having some things in it he does not like. He cannot wisely prevent free agents from sinning. He cannot punish the wicked, without making the good suffer also. A murderer must be punished, but his innocent relatives have the shame and suffering of it. A drunkard's wife and children suffer for his fault. The most benificent laws which he can put over his universe will work evil, sometimes, for the good who are associated necessarily with the evil. And in thus allowing the good to suffer God does right.

It is beyond all question the fact that the wicked are often and always spared because of the good. If the wicked were by themselves, it would be an intolerable world for them. The lazy are fed by the diligent. The wicked are restrained and are protected from each other by the good. It is the good that provide almshouses and hospitals for them. If all were put together with no restraints, it would be a hell of violence and murder and suffering. It is only the presence of the good which makes society tolerable for the wicked.

The Judge of all the earth will do things right, but not in this world. If he cannot always deal with individuals as individuals here, he can in the next world, where there is neither marrying nor giving in marriage, where there are no longer the family and social relations which here make each dependent on the other. For this final adjustment we can wait. Abraham was in too great a hurry for it.

The Story of Abraham's supplication teaches us that prayer must be importunate. Notice the deference and humility with which Abraham spoke to God. He called himself dust and ashes. He begged the Lord not to be angry and he would speak but this once. His great reverence for God and submission to his will is evident all through the story. If of a righteous it must be, as the Patriarch and not as the Pharisee. We are saved by faith, not by works, but faith will show itself in good works. We may come near to God in prayer when we want, and then we may have the benefit of it.

Encouragement. Abraham's application to God in prayer may be held, perhaps, as a failure. He did not be bold enough in asking for the Lord to be merciful to the sinners. Whenever there is a good man in a city, God will be merciful to the city for his sake. Abraham's prayer was not in vain. God's mercy was shown to his family. Lot and his family were saved. Lot's family were saved because of Abraham's prayer. Lot's family were saved because of Abraham's prayer. Lot's family were saved because of Abraham's prayer

OUR LANSING LETTER.

LANSING, [illegible]

[illegible] and the new [illegible] Among the very many practical men and business men as legislators especially so. These latter are starting in to legislate at least one closing agitate evidences of satisfaction that their business interests have been neglected for some time to come and that no more persons are likely to intrude themselves during the continuance of the session. During the recess the citizens of the capital city have depredated themselves pretty much as other people do, and have also set a spring pattern for the boys in the legislature with proper grace.

The legislators get to the front some what tardily, not so much from a reluctance to get down to business perhaps as the notability of human affairs generally and the uncertainties of railroad traveling in particular. The generality of legislators are subject to the same foots, perplexities and misgivings as vex the minds of other mortals, and while fools continue to come, and bridges continue to go, doubt and hesitancy will go on forever running rife in the bosom of the legislator as well as the less consequential citizen. It is therefore meet and proper that every legislator, weighted with a deep sense of his importance should understand the necessity not so much for his own sake as that of his constituents, of exercising the greatest possible care in expressing himself to the multitude of critiques that beset his pilgrimage while death dealing floods and hyperborean gallinippers alternate spread havoc.

Of course in this letter I cannot give your readers very much starting legislative information. A recess such as that just closed is not productive of much in that way. Still, there are a few matters I can torture, and I will proceed to do so without further preface.

I suppose about the first business will be the reception of the reports of the several committees on public institutions. Barring that of the committees on the soldiers' home, upon whom devolved the investigation of the charges made against the management of that institution, nothing of a very alarming character is expected to develop itself, and even this, if it shall be said be true, will be tame enough to catch without salt. If any of the other reports should come to the chalk line with a sensation of more or less magnitude, its unexpected appearance would make it all the more acceptable to those to whom the even tenor of things is next door to and on the same side of the street as the unendurable.

Not being satisfied that the law protecting game really protects, the Michigan sportsmen were instrumental in having a bill introduced for the appointment of a state game and fish warden. Lansing sportsmen labored so heroically for the measure that it passed the house before the recess, and they will keep up the energetic effort till their work is fully accomplished. The bill is sweeping in its character. It authorizes the appointment of a warden at a salary of $1,200 a year with three deputies in each county, and equips them with the most arbitrary powers. They are empowered to arrest violators of the game and fish laws without a warrant, and in addition to the authority of sheriffs are armed with the power of prosecuting attorneys. The warden who, with his gun on his shoulder, goes forth in quest of sport on the Sabbath day, and the unhallowed disciple of Izaak Walton who, without oath or complaint, desecrates Sunday by hiring for the fray time from their native cemeteries are promptly jailed and arraigned before the peace justice of the peace on the day following.

It is asserted that several Michigan [illegible] will need to the legislature for such amendments to their charter as will permit them to [illegible] or gas lighting for a period of several years. In other respects such an amendment is unnecessary. More than [illegible] the state Michigan [illegible] have found a liberality [illegible] the new charter. Light companies [illegible] year [illegible] not [illegible] Michigan.

[illegible] year. Consequently the first one in possession obtains a monopoly. The same rule operates in lighting with gas.

[illegible] regarded as a business rule that short contracts tend to higher prices while longer contracts bring lower bids. On the other hand, it is argued against too long contracts, from five to seven years, being deemed quite long enough. Still it would seem the most possible thing might be a well-guarded general law applicable to all the cities of the state.

[illegible] the [illegible] bling terms that augurs no good for the future, and I heartily appreciate the effort being made by Senator Holbrook to curtail this species of operations. He has under way a bill to prevent gambling in stocks, bonds, petroleum, cotton, grain, provisions and other products. It is the direct intent of the bill to suppress the bucket shops which has fleeced so many Michigan people. I do not know that any of Michigan's truly good legislators have ever been "steered against" this "racket," though it is a fact that no sooner had the legislative session commenced than a new bucket shop began operations in the city and has since carefully circulated its daily printed bulletin among the members, as though some business was expected from that quarter.

One of the first things that will receive the attention of the senate is the bill abolishing the superior court of Detroit. Before adjournment the house passed it through heatly and expeditiously, and an attempt was made to rush it through the senate, whereat Senator O'Reilly rose up and "kicked" so vigorously the effort was abandoned and the bill laid away till after the recess.

NOVELS FOR THE BOYS.

ENORMOUS EDITIONS FOR JUVENILE AMERICAN READERS.

Young America An Insatiable Devourer of Cheap Literature—Instructions to Cash Orders—How the Copy is Turned Out—In War Times.

[illegible]

[illegible] the average of each section [illegible] $20 to $15 [illegible] very cheaply. [illegible] and gets his one writing very cheap. For [illegible] for a cent. [illegible] and consider work [illegible] instructions to keep [illegible] conventions as below.

[illegible] to write for our consideration [illegible] bear in mind that. We prohibit [illegible] offensive to good taste, in excess [illegible] we prohibit subjects [illegible] that carry an immoral taint, we prohibit the exposition of any occurrence which, though true, is better left unsaid, we prohibit what cannot be read with satisfaction by every right minded person, old and young alike, we require a fast work; we require unprecedented rapidity; we require pronounced strength of plot and high dramatic interest of story; we require grace and precision of narrative styles and correctness in composition; authors must be familiar with characters and places which they introduce, and not attempt to write in fields of which they have no intimate knowledge.

CHANGING OFF THE COPY.

The concern that issues these instructions requires 10,000 to 50,000 words, and at the cheapest rate would be five cents per thousand words for a story. The cheap rate named this pays three [illegible] the price of ordinary copying. The [illegible] established publishers get very satisfactory prices. The number of persons who experiment with the business of writing these stories is declared to be wonderful. Some of the libraries reject three out of four manuscripts, others eight out of ten, not counting the production of the writers that are on the regular corps, and who can grind out the same kind of copy with the precision of machinery. The latter are supposed to get up their stories on the principle of a game of cribbage and they simply take the pegs out of one hole and stick them in another, adding variety and producing the originality called for in the instructions by changing the starting point, from the center to the corners, or vice versa, and picking up the pegs in a diagonal line or around the circle as the case may be. Some of the best writers in the country are stated to have attempted this line of writing, but have failed, branching out into irrelevant dialogue and padding up with descriptions not being able to keep up the interest in situation or dialogue. The latter is absolutely essential, as the average boy has to slide down the hill of one page very fast or he won't try to climb the top of the next.

One of the dirtiest publishers was stopped by Anthony Comstock from publishing the Jesse James series, under the law prohibiting the making of heroes out of notorious criminals. The publishers say it takes an edition of 7,000 to pay for a sixteen page dime book and 10,000 for the half dime work. The business is now picking up from the depression of the past few years. During the war the dime novels suffered enormously among the soldiers. The war library is playing out, the sales having dwindled to very light figures. The books of these libraries are sold all over the country.—New York Mail and Express.

Indestructibility of Clay.

"Clay, when placed in an [illegible] form, such for example, as an embankment, will retain that form unchanged for centuries, when protected from strong currents of water. Whether from a knowledge of this fact or from accident, the primitive inhabitants of this country built their mounds and other monuments invariably of clay, and the passing centuries have left no mark upon them that will give to the antiquarian even a hint of their age. Had these monuments of a lost race been built of stone the progress of decay would have given us some data to estimate the period of the mound builders," but a mound of clay in a dense forest, covered annually with a coat of leaves, is indestructible. A thousand years will pass and leave no footprints upon it. If clay was a rare article its wonderful properties would be a subject of constant comment, but familiarity with any object is always unfavorable to careful observation and close study.—Boston Budget.

The Latest Word.

The very latest is "[illegible]." Mashed, smashed and smashed are not [illegible] enough, which is worse. To keep up with the times we must consider the young man who, every time he rushed up to his [illegible] total exposure not as a first time, turned to the [illegible] state of the [illegible] stepped up and [illegible] when [illegible] with [illegible] on the [illegible] of [illegible] smooth [illegible] Telegram. The successful competitor for the prize, M. G. Maisson, received a gold medal for his pains. His comrades all assert that he was born with a comb. Such thinking and plain living are, in fact, necessary for those who would obtain the highest honors in hair dressing, but the true coiffeur, like the poet or the cook, is born, not made. No study or application will compensate for the divine afflatus, without which a man cannot write epic poetry or successfully dress the heads of young ladies.—Paris Letter.

Macklin paused, looked at the refractory actor and quietly said: "Suppose we all [illegible] a little in the green room." He walked in and the actor followed by 50 eyes, just long enough to discover he then took out his watch, looked at it and laid it on the table. "Now," said he, "we will [illegible] the rehearsal." The performers assembled and kept rather amazed eyes on the actor. At the expiration of the hour Macklin took up his watch. "Now," he said, "we are all good humored and we'll go upon the stage and begin our rehearsal."—Detroit Free Press.

THE STORY OF A MINE.

By BRET HARTE.

[Copyrighted, 1886, by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., and published by arrangement with them.]

Thatcher turned his eyes again abstractedly to the fire.

Harlowe took out the first paper.

"A-w, this seems to be a telegram. Yes, eh! 'Come to Washington at once. Carmen de Haro.'"

Thatcher started, blushed like a girl, and hurriedly reached for the paper.

"Nonsense. That's a mistake. A dispatch I mislaid in the envelope."

"I see," said the lawyer dryly.

"I thought I had torn it up," continued Thatcher after an awkward pause. "I regret to say that here that usually truthful man elaborated a fiction. He had consulted it a dozen times a day on the journey, and it was quite worn in its envelopes. Harlowe's quick eye had noticed this, but he speedily became interested and absorbed in the other papers. Thatcher lapsed into contemplation of the fire.

"Well," said Harlowe, finally, turning to his client, "here's enough to unseat Gasawler, or close his mouth. As to the rest, it's good reading—but I needn't tell you—no legal evidence. But it's proof enough to stop them from ever trying it again—when the existence of this record is made known. Bribery is a hard thing to fix on a man, the only witness is naturally participes criminis—but it would not be easy for them to explain away this recal's record. One or two things I don't understand. What's this opposite the Hon. X. Vague, 'Took the nosh one nicely, and feels better' and here, just in the margin, after Y's, 'Must be labored with?'"

"I suppose our California slang borrows largely from the medical and spiritual profession," returned Thatcher. "But isn't it odd that a man should keep a conscientious record of his own villainy?"

Harlowe, a little abashed at his want of knowledge of American metaphor, now felt himself at home. "Well, no. It's not unusual. In one of these books yonder there is the record of a case where a man, who had committed a series of nameless atrocities, extending over a period of years, absolutely kept a memorandum of them in his pocket diary. It was produced in court. Why, my dear fellow, one half of our business arises from the fact that men and women are in the habit of keeping letters and documents. But they ought not, that is, you know, that they ought, that is, a question of sentiment or ethics—but that they ought destroy."

Thatcher half mechanically took the telegram of poor Carmen and threw it in the fire. Harlowe noticed the act and smiled.

"I'll venture to say, however, that there's nothing in the bag that you for that matter give you a moment's uneasiness. It's only your rascal or fool who carries with him a record which makes him his own detective."

"I had a friend," continued Harlowe, "a clever fellow enough, but who was so foolish as to seriously complicate himself with a woman. He was himself the soul of honor, and at the beginning of their correspondence he proposed that they should each return the other's letters with their answer. They did so for years, but it cost him ten thousand dollars and no end of trouble after all."

"Why?" asked Thatcher simply.

"Because he was such an egotistical ass as to keep the letter proposing it, which she had duly returned, among his papers as a sentimental record. Of course somebody eventually found it."

"Good night," said Thatcher, rising abruptly. "If I stayed here much longer I should begin to disbelieve my own mother."

"I have known of such hereditary traits," returned Harlowe with a laugh. "But come, you must not go without the champagne." He led the way to the adjacent room, which proved to be only the anteschamber of another, on the threshold of which Thatcher stopped with genuine surprise. It was as elegantly furnished library.

"Sybaritic! Why was I never here before?"

"Because you came as a client to transact your business, with their lists, in the long room. There, you'd A few boxes of cigars, and a table, and a pipe. You'd'd. Well, it was worth more to get rid of you quickly. Sit down, old fellow, and make yourself at home. Here's to—"

"Stop!" said Thatcher, startled by the sudden change in his companion's manner, and feeling the tobacco-laden air of the room suddenly oppressive. "Not a word about—about—you know whom. Not a word about her! Let me forget that I ever—"

"Forgive me, old fellow, I'm a brute. Here's to—"

"Stop!" interrupted Thatcher, with a new shiver. "I—I don't like to be reminded of—of—you know what I mean.

THE FARMERS' INSTITUTE.

THE SEVERAL FARMERS CLUBS IN THE VICINITY OF TECUMSEH HOLD COUNCIL TOGETHER

The Program Presented at the Opera House last Friday—A Large Gathering in Attendance—A Very Interesting Session.

The Farmers' Institute organized and participated in by the three Farmers' Clubs in this vicinity, was held at the Opera House on Friday of last week according to previous announcement. The weather in the morning could not have been much worse for such a gathering. Rain and sleet overhead and mud underfoot was the prospect in store for those who braved the elements to attend. But the farmers of Northern Lenawee are not made out of sugar nor salt, and although a little tardy in arriving, a goodly number assembled to open the morning session.

The President of the Farmers' Social Club, Mr. L. H. Schreder, acted as President of the Institute. The Clinton Glee Club had been engaged to furnish the music, and they remained through the entire day. The clubs composed of live young men, viz: Clas. Keyser, Will Codling, A. F. Kishpaugh, A. J. Kishpaugh, vocalists and F. D. Haiss, pianist. They have practiced together for some time, and their music is judiciously selected and very finely executed. The music was a most creditable addition to the program, and sandwiched in with the more ponderous essays it was admirable.

President Schreder called the assemblage to order shortly after eleven o'clock and the exercises were opened with Old Coronation, led by the Glee Club.

Next followed the invocation by Rev. W. H. Babbitt.

The address of welcome followed by Judge Stacy. He gave a brief review of the progress of this county since its first settlement 50 years ago. There were three families then, over 50,000 people now. Not a single school house then, over 200 now. Not a church then, nearly 200 now. The first settlers have almost entirely passed away and I see their children and grandchildren before me to-day. I like the idea of these Farmers' clubs. It shows that the farming community hereabouts are prepared to avail themselves of every means to perfect themselves in their calling. They are not disposed to keep their knowledge and experience a secret. They meet and discuss agricultural questions. This course of self training is a grand school for the farmers. It will have a great influence in bringing them up to the place they ought to fill in society at large, and you are doing this, not for yourselves alone but for your children and the community. I welcome you to your duties here and hope this institute may be one of many to be held here in the future.

The response was given by Mr. B. Hurry, the President of the Tecumseh and Franklin Club. Mr. Hurry gave a brief sketch of the three clubs which were engaged in the institute. The "Farmers' Social" has been organized about seven years. It was of humble origin, but it has grown with the years until the largest houses in this section are too small to accommodate the meetings. The "Tecumseh and Franklin" was started about two years ago and has prospered abundantly. Their meetings have been well kept up and the right kind of emulation has existed among the members to improve each succeeding meeting.

The "Northern Lenawee" is only one month old, but is a very precocious child for one of its age. These three clubs have joined hands together and arranged the program to be given to-day. This institute is really a Farmers' Club on a larger scale. Essays and papers will be read and discussions invited upon them. I hope there will be no delicacy about engaging in these discussions. Mr. Hurry delivered his remarks impromptu. They were right to the point, and were well received.

The Clinton Glee Club then sang a quartette entitled "The Village Bells."

An adjournment was then taken for dinner.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

During the dinner hour refreshments were served on the stage and about the hall basket picnic fashion, and hot tea and coffee were provided free. Before noon the weather had improved somewhat so that the afternoon session was well attended.

The audience was called to order by President Schreder promptly at 1 o'clock and the program was opened by a piano solo rendered by Miss Electa Benedict. The piece was very finely rendered and received applause.

A recitation by Miss Ella Cooper followed, giving the remembrance of a school teacher's club, taking a district school with a well-meaning but exhausting manner.

Mrs. B. Hurry followed with a select reading entitled "Mrs. Stutson's Soft Soap." Mrs. Hurry has a keen appreciation of the humorous and a happy tion was warmly received.

W. B. Keyser followed with a carefully prepared paper on "The Outlook of Wheat Growing." The paper is printed in full below and will repay a thorough perusal.

Quite a discussion followed this paper. Remarks were made by Abner Wilson and by Hon. Minor T. Cole of Palmyra. Mr. Cole was on his way home from Lansing and stopped off to visit the institute. These remarks elicited many facts which were doubtless of much interest and value to the farmers present.

"Silvery Bells" was sweetly rung by the Glee Club.

Impromptu Club was then called out, and responded very pleasantly in a few speeches although a stranger to many of those present. Mr. Cole's remarks were warmly received and highly appreciated. The clubs would gladly become better acquainted with him.

Henry Wilson followed with a paper on Sheep Husbandry, which is given in full below. This paper also elicited considerable discussion. Remarks were made by James B. Colvin of Raisin and by Jacob Everhart which conveyed the impression that they were thoroughly posted on the subject of raising sheep.

Mr. and Mrs. T. D. Strong followed with a song. "The Cows are in the Corn." Mr. and Mrs. Strong need no introduction to our readers. They are well known as thoroughly trained vocalists and their musical talents are frequently utilized at the club meetings, at private entertainments and in the social circle. It was a decided hit and a fine addition to the musical portion of the program.

Mrs. VanVaikenburg read an essay on the "Fashions" which was carefully written and abounded in wholesome good sense. We hope to be able to present this essay to our readers at some future time.

F. V. Horton then read a paper "Then and Now." This was certainly one of the best papers read during the entire institute, and we shall take the liberty of reproducing it in these columns at no distant date.

A quartette by the Glee Club closed the afternoon's program and an adjournment was then taken for supper.

EVENING SESSION.

The exercises of the evening opened with an instrumental duet by Misses Fisher and Hendelson, which was very handsomely performed.

"Mrs. Torgnty's Christmas Cake" was sung by the Clinton Glee Club. They were given a rousing encore and happily responded.

Miss Jennie Nyland read a fine essay on "Courage and Backbone."

Miss Etta Stacy gave a recitation which it is no flattery to say was one of the gems of the evening.

Abner Wilson followed with a very interesting paper on "Gardening." We never before saw such a large cabbage-head at this season of the year.

A dialogue by Frankie Osborn and Clarence Harry was very nicely recited.

A song, "Always Do your Best Boys," was admirably sang by Mr. and Mrs. Strong and elicited a hearty encore.

Alex. Richard read a paper on Agriculture in general, which was one of the meatiest productions of the entire day.

"Our Needs," by C. H. Bramble was carefully written and finely read.

The Raisin Glee Club then came on the platform and gave a quartette "Jolly Jonathan" which took the house by storm. They responded to an encore with "Juice of the Forbidden Fruit."

"Farmer's clubs as Educators" was Mrs. F. C. Rector's contribulation to the program, and was an excellent one, of course.

"The Sailor's Return" was finely sang by the Clinton Glee Club.

"Botany in Agriculture" by Frank Hall and "Berries for the Farmer" by Scott Reilington were two excellent papers and showed much thought and information.

The program closed with a rousing glee by the Raisin club, entitled "Hear Dem Bells."

The essays read, we shall publish in weekly installments as rapidly as our space will permit. Two of them appear below.

The Outlook of Wheat Growing

With our granaries filled to overflowing, our mills to their utmost capacity, our great wheat centers asking for more elevator room, we may well pause to enquire, What is the outlook of wheat growing.

There was raised last year in round numbers 450 millions bush of wheat in the United States. This would fill one million cars and make a train of which placed at the rate apart would reach around the entire globe, or make one solid train from New York to San Francisco and back again to Wheeling, West Virginia.

We find the price the lowest for years and with no immediate cause for it to do some much to stay the hand of the husbandman in the production of this staple product. We find the average price for the last crop being 68.7 cts. per bushel, a reduction of 35 per cent from the average of the years from 1870 to 1880. Let us look at the past and see if we can find any [illegible] this difficult question. The native country of wheat is supposed to be central part of Asia. Wheat has been cultivated from the earliest ages and was the chief crop of ancient Egypt and Palestine. It is now cultivated in all of the principle countries of the globe, thereby bringing us into competition with India, Russia, Egypt, France, Germany and Canada, in seeking a market for our surplus product. [illegible] ed wheat from foreign countries in 1880, we exported over 180 millions of bushels in the shape of flour and grain. This was the largest exportation from this or any other country that was ever known. Our population has increased from 23 millions in 1850 to 50 millions in 1880, of 217 per cent, while our wheat production has increased from 100 millions in 1850 to 498 millions in 1880, or 398 per cent for the same time. According to these figures, taken from the United States census of 1880, our wheat production has increased twice as fast as our population. If we keep up this rate of production for the next thirty years, we would produce the enormous amount of 2,000 millions of bushels at the end of that time. Let us see how the low price of wheat has effected us in this latitude. Southern Michigan, taking the figures from the state department gathered by crop correspondents. In last crop report returned, we find that the profit of a bushel of oats to be 12 per cent of the selling price; the profit of wheat 17 per cent, corn 20 per cent, and hay 44 per cent. Not very encouraging for our once chief crop, wheat, when we have blight, insects etc. to contend with in raising this crop.

We have looked at the dark side of this question, now let us look at the bright side, with our improved machinery, especially the self-binder, which can be operated by the boy of twelve, the girl of "sweet sixteen" and the grand father of 80, to cut, bind and carry together if you please, from ten to fifteen acres per day. We can produce wheat much cheaper than by the old process, and when we take it to market it does not take a bushel to buy a yard of cotton cloth as it did years ago, as some of these pioneers present can probably testify to here to day. In 1886 we imported 249 millions of dollars worth of agricultural products. Among the principle products that we import, off which our diversified soil is capable of producing, we find sugar, hides, fruits, wool, wines, tobacco, barley, horses, cattle, hemp, flax and eggs. Importations of the same ranging in value from 72 millions for sugar, scaling down to 2 million for eggs. From a farmer's stand point of view, and "when the farmer prospers we all prosper," it would seem that if Congress would encourage and stimulate the production of such products as we largely import of by wise legislation that it would necessarily decrease the production of wheat, meanwhile we are raising largely of other crops we cannot raise as much wheat, and consequently enhancing the price by the great, but sure law of supply and demand. There is one more contingency that is liable to arise at any time, that would materially change the situation of wheat growing, and that is foreign war. It would be inhuman to wish for war, that the price of wheat might be advanced at the cost of bloodshed, but if war should come, we must view the situation as it would then be. The war clouds have been hovering over all Europe for some time, but thus far the sweet dove of peace has succeeded in preventing the clash of arms. What would the effect be if Russia should wage war with Turkey? As here lies the bone of contention, it is in all probability that Austria, England, Germany, France and Italy, would become involved before it could be settled, leaving only India and United States to supply their wants caused by war in waste, increased consumption and decreased production in those countries involved in this great struggle of nations. Then would our surplus disappear, our graineries cease to groan under their weight, and wheat growing would once more be a profitable business.

Hoping that these few feeble but well meaning remarks will provoke a spirited but friendly discussion, I will leave the subject in the hands of these enterprising farmers for their consideration.

W. B. KEYSER.

Sheep Husbandry

Mr. President, ladies and gentlemen: There is an old Spanish proverb that says "Where treads the foot of the sheep the land is turned to gold."

The first thing [illegible] sheep husbandry is to make good farmers of the shepherds. [illegible] sheep, and [illegible] plains, and Palestine, the land that "once flowed with milk and honey" and are now a barren desert, and we might cite numerous instances of this kind, where, as history tells us, "The flocks often hunted on a thousand hills, and were kept out of sight of one."

The greater portion of Asia, where once flourished the great empires, or hordes of sheep, and were jealously protected by the laws of that country is now a barren waste, because the flocks were destroyed. And History will repeat itself in our own country unless we keep up the flocks, although there may be periods when the business may not seem profitable, still with a reasonable protective tariff, as matter of national economy, and by improving our sheep it can be made to pay good returns. The tariff is a question I know there is a great difference of opinion, and with what light I have on the subject I fail to see any good reason why wool should not be protected, thereby stimulating production in our own country and keeping some millions of dollars from being sent to foreign countries and millions more in keeping up the fertility of the soil.

What is the condition of the state of Virginia to day as compared to her once fertile soil and great statesmen? She is fast becoming a cipher in the great sisterhood of states, constant cropping with tobacco has reduced her to almost barrenness. On the other hand states of New England and New York by keeping up and improving her flocks have kept up the fertility of the soil and are constantly growing in wealth. In Southern Michigan, where mixed husbandry is the rule, no farm should be without a few good sheep, and I think the opinion of three fourths of the farmers right through Lenawee Co., will bear me out in the statement that they pay as well, or better than any other farm products. Even with wool at 25c per lb. As to the most profitable breed to keep, I should choose the Merino grades although in some localities, and especially where wool is low, the downs and middle wools can be made to pay. should pay particular attention to improvement by breeding to the best specimens of the thoroughbred, and as wool and mutton is the object, the aim should be, first, for a sire, a well developed carcass of good size, wool of medium length and plenty of oil, not for mere weight of fleece, but upon the oil depends the value of the Merino fleece, first, because it tends to preserve its felting properties, and a fair amount of oil in the fleece is essential to this. Second the greatest improvement is obtained through sires carrying an excess of oil.

The first and constant care of all good shepherds is to take good care of the lambs. This duty generally commences early in April and should the weather be stormy and cold requires vigilance and watchfulness, and will repay you well for extra labor.

The practice of washing sheep is cruel and unnecessary, and should be abandoned by every one. Michigan and Ohio are the only states where this practice is followed, and should we shear our sheep early, being careful to keep them in clean pastures, wool would be bought on its merits, the health of the sheep as well as the owner would be better. Sheep are less liable to disease than any of our domestic animals. Foot-rot being the only ailment of any serious nature in this climate, and this only when they are allowed to run on wet or marshy land or filthy, muddy barn yards. This disease, however readily yields to proper remedies, when taken in its earliest stages, but when allowed to become fully seated, is more difficult to cure. A common practice among many is to turn the sheep out as soon as the snow is off the ground to grub and roughit, especially after the fleece is taken off frequently turning them away off into some wood lot and there they shun their duty ends. This is a great mistake, for although they will stand abuse and starvation and still grow wool how much better results can be had by good pastures and shelter from cold storms especially after the warm coat is taken off. As the season advances that pest of all insect pests lice attack, especially the sheep huddle together in terror with the noses to the ground, hard fighting and pitiful bleating to night. As the day dawns [illegible] upon the sheep [illegible] upon [illegible] As a preventive [illegible] should come to the winter in good flesh. Commence feeding grain early as frequently they will become reduced and this will practically destroy the value of the fleece, it becoming weak [illegible] as manufacturers make a great discrimination in strength of fiber. Although as wool is not always bought on its real value, farmers do not notice this.

[illegible] time and worry your patience by giving figures to prove that a good flock of merino sheep is the best investment a farmer can make, but will compare them to Government bonds, interest [illegible] coupon, that is the fleece. In the fall you have another in the mutton.

[illegible] and your increase to pay keeping. Finally, ladies and men, with a plea for the rest of the tariff of 1887, as a measure [illegible] the utmost importance [illegible] vidual in the United States, to age this great and important [illegible] I look forward to the time when will be peace and prosperity like the farmers of Acadia [illegible] send our flocks forth in the time to multiply and increase the barren places to become to add wealth and happiness land, and like Argonauts of get to Golden of the [illegible]

PETERSON'S MAGAZINE for March already before us—as usual, ahead of all its cotemporaries. One novelty of the thing about this ever progressive lady's book is that it has, each month, some new and peculiar feature. For instance, it is an article on Queen Victoria, this being the "Jubilee" or 50th year of her reign. It has illustrations of her in childhood, in her coronation robes, her wedding, as she looks now, etc. There is a very fine steel engraving after a famous picture in the last Paris Salon, a double size colored fashion plate, a colored design for a fifty dollar lava canvas and some fifty other engravings of fashion, work tables, designs, etc. We have not space to notice half the good things in the way of fiction, but we would call attention especially to "The Mountain Wizard," a story of remarkable power and pathos. Every thing for a woman to wish for in a magazine is to be found in Peterson, and, in consequence, this lady's book ought to be found in every household. Now is a good time to subscribe. Terms: Two Dollars a year, with great deductions to clubs. Specimens sent, gratis, to those wishing to get up clubs. Address CHARLES J. PETERSON, 306 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Judge Howell, after mature and careful consideration, has finally declined to be a candidate for re-election to the Circuit Judgeship. It was generally understood until lately that he would consent to be a candidate, and his declination will cause sincere regret throughout the district. The Circuit Judges are very poorly paid for the amount of labor performed, and the prospect of forming a more lucrative business connection is the cause of his declination.

The funeral of Mrs. Ann Fox was held in Franklin township on Thursday afternoon, Feb. 10th, at one o'clock. She was born in Colerain, Mass., April 3d 1801. The gallery of the opera house was crowded last evening at the benefit of Sergt. Wm. Moir and many spectators had to find a seat below. The entertainment commenced promptly at 8 o'clock and the City band never played more sweetly, Co. C. never drilled more perfectly and the dancers never enjoyed themselves more thoroughly. Several selections by the band were the first thing on the program, after which Co. C. went through a drill, exhibiting several difficult movements very skillfully and bringing forth repeated applause from the spectators. Dancing came next and was participated in by about fifty couple. The young man from Country was there with his best girl and helped to swell the crowd, and everybody had a good old fashioned time, devoid of stiff formalities, until the morning hours tripping the light fantastic to the excellent music made by Hubbard & Machrum's orchestra. The cause was a worthy one and the Co. deserve great credit for the efforts made by them in making the affair a success. MOTHER GOOSE KINGDOM

The ladies of St. Peter's church are noted for their success in getting up fine entertainments of a literary or musical character but they surpassed themselves in their last effort. The exhibition given on Thursday evening by Mother Goose and her numerous family was one of the most elaborate affairs of the kind ever seen in Tecumseh. The old lady herself appeared in all her glory, accompanied not only by her immediate family but also by her uncles, and aunts and cousins to the remotest generation. It would be not only a very difficult task but a very tedious one to give a detailed description of all the characters. Mother Goose, Little Boy Blue, old King Cole, Jack and Jill, Peter the Pumpkin Eater, Simple Simon, and scores of others graced the occasion with their presence, and set the audience in a roar with their oddities. Nearly all the characters were introduced during the pantomimes and specialties, and at the close the procession marched about the auditorium with one hundred in line. This parade was just immense. A large amount of labor must have been expended in drilling the rehearsals and preparing the costumes, many of the latter being exceedingly rich and expensive. Notwithstanding the drenching rain, the opera house was crowded and the program although lengthy held the closest attention till the last. For the musical part of the entertainment the young ladies are indebted to Miss Jennie Root and others for valuable assistance. The conception of the affair was due to Mrs. Gage, and she performed most of the labor in the organization and rehearsals, which was no small task. The young ladies realized a handsome sum as the result of their enterprise.

TECUMSEH POULTRY AT THE STATE SHOW

In the last number of the Michigan Poultry Breeder we find the following items in regard to the poultry exhibited at the Grand Rapids show.

Wm. Heck, of Tecumseh, showed a pair of German Artlers that was imported by him last spring.

Dr. Chas. Waldron, of Tecumseh, showed some very fine White Cochins, and won 1st on cockerel, 1st and 2nd on pullet, 4th on hen. His exhibit attracted much attention and was a fine display, his birds scoring from 91 to 95½.

David Jones, of Tecumseh, showed some of the finest Buff Cochins ever shown in the state. He won 1st on cock, scoring 99½, hen 94½, pullet 94½. He also had pullets that scored 95 and was cut 3 points on weight. His eight birds scored on an average with weight added, 7.43 points, or about 94 points to the bird. Mr. Jones makes a specialty of Buff Cochins, and those wishing fine stock will do well to write him for prices.

A CORRECTION.

MR. EDITOR:—I notice that I am [illegible] and awful misquoted in an article in last weeks "Herald." The impression is given that Mr. Tiffany visited the Central school building when everything was going as usual during school days. The facts are he visited it on Saturday when there had been no fire in the building since Friday P. M., and instead of "shoveling" wood into the furnaces, I had let the fire go entirely out, as is my custom, and was cleaning out the furnaces which can not be done while they are hot. Two small lights of glass have recently been broken, but when the fires are going the basement is not uncomfortably cold unless windows or doors have been open to get in wood and it is very windy. We have had no trouble this winter in keeping the school rooms on the first floor comfortably warm. The trouble has all been in the rooms on the second and third floor.

OBITUARY.

Mrs. Clarissa Chase, relict of the late Leonard S. Chase, departed this life on the 4th inst. at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Wm. A. Burlingame, of Tecumseh.

The deceased was born in Cayuga Co. N. Y., Sept. 9th 1809. Her parents, Nathan and Mary Paddock moved to Michigan when she was but four years of age, and settled in the township of Bilsdale. On the 5th of October 1828 she was united in marriage to Leonard S. Chase, and the couple settled on a farm in the township of Raisin, where they lived most of the time until their death. During a brief sojourn in Tecumseh in 1868, they both united with the Baptist church of this village, of which she was a member at her death. Her life was one of patient toil, hope and intense anxiety for the welfare of her children. She was loved by all who knew her best. She leaves two children to mourn her departure, Mrs. Chas. Moir, of Tecumseh, and E. A. wife of Wm. A. Burlingame, of this village. The funeral services were held at the house of her daughter, Mrs. Moir, on Sunday afternoon, and the most impressive discourse was delivered by Rev. C. E. Cycler, of Detroit, a former pastor of the deceased. [illegible]

TEMPERANCE COLUMN.

Edited by a Committee of the W. C. T. U

A GOVERNOR'S TESTIMONY.

Does Prohibition prohibit? Governor Martin, of Kansas, says it does, and Governor Martin is not an enthusiast [illegible] rather than let the sentiment of his party on this question. During the recent campaign in this state he was openly and frequently charged with a lack of interest in the enforcement of the prohibitory law. Radical temperance men [illegible] leniency to violators of this law. His testimony will not be accepted as right of an enthusiast.

In his recent message to the Legislature of Kansas, delivered to that body on Jan. 12, he gave some very pointed suggestions respecting the improvement and better enforcement of the laws against the sale of liquors. In the course of his remarks he said:

Three general elections have been held in Kansas since the adoption of the Prohibition amendment to the Constitution. At each of these elections the people have reaffirmed their decision against the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, by electing Legislatures pledged to the support of the amendment. At the election in November last this question was a paramount issue, and again, by an emphatic majority, the sovereign verdict of the people was pronounced against the saloon. No fair minded citizen can, no law respecting citizen will, refuse to respect this judgment.

It is your duty, gentlemen of the Legislature, to see that laws are enacted which will give practical effect to the decision of the people on this question. I stated in my message a year ago, that while the law of 1885 embodied some defects, its general results had been very favorable. I have seen no occasion to reverse this judgment. A great reform has certainly been accomplished in Kansas. Intemperance is steadily and surely decreasing. In thousands of homes, where want and wretchedness and suffering were once familiar guests, plenty, happiness, and contentment now abide. Thousands of wives and children are better clothed and fed than they were when the saloons absorbed all the earnings of husbands and fathers. The marvelous material growth of the State during the past six years has been accompanied by an equally marvelous moral progress, and it can be fairly and truthfully asserted that in no portion of the civilized world can a million and a half of people be found who are more temperate than are the people of Kansas.

That intoxicating liquors are sold as a beverage anywhere within the limits of Kansas is not because of faults in our laws touching this question. These laws, inexactive as they are in some features, are ample enough in their directions, restrictions, and penalties to punish every person who either sells or buys liquor for unlawful purposes. There is not a town, city, or neighborhood in the State in which an illegal traffic in liquors can be carried on for a single week if the local officers discharge the duties plainly enjoined upon them by law with zeal and fidelity. Provide the necessary laws to compel local officers to discharge their sworn duties, and to remove them when they neglect or refuse to do so, and there will be no need to make many other changes in our statutes. On the other hand, no matter what amendments are made, nor what provisions are added to the present law, they will be ineffectual so long as the municipal authorities of cities or counties can nullify or disregard them without fear of removal or punishment.

RESULTS OF PROHIBITION.

The public sentiment of Kansas is overwhelmingly against the liquor traffic. Thousands of men who a few years ago opposed Prohibition or doubted whether it was the best method of dealing with the liquor traffic, have seen and frankly acknowledged its beneficent results and its practical success. The temptations with which the open saloon allured the youth of the land to disgrace and destruction, the appetite for liquor, but and nurtured within its walls by the treating custom, the vice, crime, poverty, suffering and sorrow of which it was always the fruitful source, all these and thousands of other evils have been abolished in nearly every town and city in Kansas. There is not an observing man [illegible] who does not know that a [illegible] has been accomplished in Kansas by Prohibition. There is now [illegible] in the state who will not [illegible] knowledge this fact, notwithstanding their opinions [illegible] Prohibition may have been. And it needs to be borne in mind that the [illegible] of the law [illegible] suggestive [illegible] of the [illegible] prohibitory laws [illegible] the duties required of them by law, [illegible] of these officers [illegible] open saloon in Kansas, for the sale of intoxicating liquors [illegible]

It is not necessary to develop inferences from these remarkable statements. They effectually answer a the current objections to Prohibition as the most effectual method of deliv[illegible] from the curse of the liquor traffic.

A SURPRISE

It never rains but it pours. Monday, Feb. 7, was a most dismal day. From the heavy leaden colored sky the rain came down in torrents, filling the hollows, and flooding the ditches. From out the mist and murkiness there dropped suddenly on the Smith Macon premises, as though they had fallen from the sky, a merry company of friends and neighbors.

The occasion for their coming was the birthday of the "Mistress of the Manse," and they brought in their hands for it is not their wont to come empty handed, not the fight bread which the Israelites loathed in the wilderness, but such good cheer as only the ladies of South Macon can furnish.

Mr. Bailey, on behalf of the friends, presented to Mrs. Dutton with a few well chosen words, an elegant upholstered rocker as a token of their esteem. Though fully appreciating the generous kindness which had prompted the gift, the dominie's wife found herself so short of breath, on account of the complete surprise of the coming, that she could find but few words to express her thanks.

The evident heartiness with which everyone entered into the spirit of the occasion, made it the more enjoyable. "Some day must be dark and dreary," but here was one such made bright for at least one heart. And if one may judge by the smiling faces, which lighted up the parsonage, the words have not yet lost their significance, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

Card of Thanks

The children of Mrs. Clarissa Chase wish to return sincere thanks to their neighbors and friends for the kindness and sympathy shown them in their great affliction.

THE CHAIN GANG GUARD.

The terrible story of a hot summer day's work on the apparently boundless cotton plantations of Col. Jefferson Clay.

[illegible] was a fine place, sure, and was all [illegible] worked by a force of chain gang [illegible] belonged to Col. Clay, in the [illegible]

[illegible] Dick Mason made his appearance, running at full speed. He was almost [illegible] the gang of prisoners.

"I had to kill him to escape!" [illegible] sorry enough to have to do it, but [illegible] and large, he was [illegible] killed me. [illegible] the prisoners [illegible] the overseer [illegible] was disposed to the house to inform Col. Clay of the occurrence.

The "worthy" overseer, Jessup, swore roundly at first, but after a little reflection [illegible]

"We were [illegible] glad the fellow's gone. It meant lots of trouble—a pow'ful sight of trouble—couldn't do a fair day's work, and always stirring the other men to mutiny—it's the best thing that could have happened."

The order returned to the field bearing from Col. Clay the laconic message, "It's all right," and the work of the day went on as usual.

When the prisoners knocked off work at sundown they were marched to the stockade, in which they were always penned up at night, and two men were sent out with a guard to bury the dead man.

No coroner's inquest was held. It was not likely that anybody would raise a stir over a trifling an event as the shooting of a chain gang malefactor. A grave was hastily dug near the place where the body lay, and the carcass was dumped into a hole and covered over with dirt.

In a week the affair was forgotten. Matters on the plantation moved on as usual, with the exception of the absence of Dick Mason. Nobody seemed to care a pin for the fellow, and after a few days it was generally supposed that he would [illegible] some better employment [illegible] Dick, [illegible] the [illegible] rabbit [illegible] The [illegible] crossed the mountains, and [illegible] any [illegible] worn the fingers of the guard [illegible] for a change of scene and [illegible]

The season at Bazatelle Springs was at its height. Visitors who had not missed a season for twenty years declared with a vehemence enthusiasm that Bazatelle had never appeared to better advantage. The hotel was filled with guests and the cottages were well patronized. Fairer women and braver men were never assembled together to trifle away the days and engage in moonlight revels.

The gallant of all the gay and high spirited gallants who were the acknowledged idolaters of Bazatelle was undoubtedly Mr. Richard Macon.

This young man was a riddle to the few students of human nature who occasionally made him a special study. Young, handsome, possessed of abundant means and regarded with undisguised favor by [illegible] of the opposite sex, there appeared to be every reason why young Macon should be a thoroughly happy man. That he was not happy, in spite of his bright surface, was plain to all who cared to see. The days passed, and Macon was engaged in a continuous round of pleasure. Athletic and proficient in every manly sport and pastime, from a rowing match to a game of croquet, it was hard to imagine that his time should be fully occupied.

Nobody knew anything against Mr. Richard Macon, and yet there was a freely expressed surprise in the gay circle at Bazatelle when it was known that the young man had won the heart and a promise of the hand of Irene Murray, the prettiest little blonde beauty at the [illegible] was difficult to give a reason for this. that their thirsty comrades left behind began to cast wistful glances in their direction.

The loud report of a musket in the [illegible] of the spring startled the chain gang, and the guards into the greatest excitement.

What was the matter? Had Dick Mason fired upon [illegible] in the act of escaping? Had he wrested the musket from Dick and shot him? These were the [illegible] answered in a moment.

Dick Mason made his appearance, running at full speed. He was almost [illegible] the gang of prisoners.

"I had to kill him to escape!" [illegible] sorry enough to have to do it, but [illegible] and large, he was [illegible] killed me. [illegible] the prisoners [illegible] the overseer [illegible] was disposed to the house to inform Col. Clay of the occurrence.

The "worthy" overseer, Jessup, swore roundly at first, but after a little reflection [illegible]

"We were [illegible] glad the fellow's gone. It meant lots of trouble—a pow'ful sight of trouble—couldn't do a fair day's work, and always stirring the other men to mutiny—it's the best thing that could have happened."

The order returned to the field bearing from Col. Clay the laconic message, "It's all right," and the work of the day went on as usual.

Miss Murray was an heiress, the only child of a wealthy widowed mother who had come to Bazatelle in [illegible] her health, and had to set her [illegible] for a second husband. On the morrow she and her [illegible] were to return home. The [illegible] had been [illegible] away from [illegible] jewel case. Silently opening [illegible] posed to the astonished vision of the [illegible] girl a quaint and rare necklace, glittering diamonds in just such [illegible] as would have [illegible] a queen in the middle ages.

"Richard!" the cry escaped [illegible] in an astonished tone, as she [illegible] the necklace and held it to the light.

"Isn't it pretty?" said Richard, with an injured look.

[illegible]

"Where is it, Richard? [illegible] sparkling [illegible] purchased [illegible] in Paris, I think."

"Have you a brother, [illegible] the [illegible] and then [illegible] your family?"

"What can you mean—you are [illegible] Irene?"

"I mean," returned Irene, with a piercing glance, "that this necklace is one of the articles my poor murdered father had with him when he was killed and robbed in Georgia four years ago."

"Pshaw!" cried Richard. "It may resemble it, but of course it cannot be the same. Don't I know that it has always been in our family? You are losing your senses, Irene."

"I am not mistaken," was the agitated reply. "I have handled this necklace too often to be mistaken. Why, here is the private mark, placed there by my father one day in my presence. I well recollect that he said at the time that the mark might some day aid in identifying the necklace if it should ever be lost. If it be the same, and now, Richard Macon, how came you by this precious heirloom?"

"Your question is an insult," was the hot answer. "Give me the necklace."

"Never! This matter must be explained. I must know if your hands are stained with my father's blood."

"Scoundrel!" said Richard. "I never heard that Mr. Murray was murdered. Your talk is the maddest mystery in the world to me."

"My father's name was Henderson," said Irene, sternly. "He was murdered [illegible] in Georgia. He had with him a large sum of money and this jewelry. My father was robbed in the murder, [illegible] guilty and sent to the [illegible] but the jewels were not found on him, and it was supposed his murderer [illegible] them."

"You said your father's name was Henderson."

"Yes. After his death a wealthy bachelor brother of my mother died, and left her a large fortune on condition that she should resume the family name of Murray, and the condition was exacted of myself. We accepted the legacy, but when a foul murder is to be avenged, Irene Murray remembers that she is Irene Henderson."

Richard Macon looked [illegible] confounded.

"I swear—" he began.

"Villain, [illegible]" exclaimed Irene, her eyes flashing fire. "You began with a lie—you called the necklace an heirloom—you will lie on to the end of the chapter if I permit it. If you have any statement to make explaining how the necklace came into your possession, you may proceed."

For a moment Richard Macon looked like some wild animal at bay. Then, recollecting himself, he made a profound bow and said:

"I shall leave you now, Irene—you are in no mood to listen to reason. In the morning you will humble at your feet of to-night and will beg my pardon. I shall leave you here. Au revoir" and with a [illegible] smile he kissed his hand and walked rapidly away, [illegible] standing like a statue, with the necklace clutched tightly in her hand.

* * *

When morning came, just as the gray light was chasing the darkness away, a pistol shot rang through the hotel. There was a rushing to and fro, and finally a crowd of servants and boarders stood in Richard Macon's room, gazing on the dead body of the [illegible] as it lay stretched upon the bed, with a pistol firmly grasped in the right hand.

Richard Macon had taken his life. It was not the fear of [illegible] compelled him to the rash act, [illegible] to hold his own against the [illegible] he knew that [illegible] would clear him of the charge of murder and death was a welcome [illegible] to [illegible]

Persia's Minister of Public Printing.

The shah's doolah, or minister of public printing, is a functionary who is often closeted with the shah as he is a pliable censor and fearless critic of the official journals. It is said that nothing goes into these periodicals without first passing under the eye of the shah. But as they appear only monthly and cover but four pages in large type, the task of editing is more apparent than real.

The shah's doolah also assists the shah in editing his journal of travel and preparing them for the press. The most recent work of this description is the account of the shah's excursion to Mecca in 1882, in which the royal author gives some of his own conclusions concerning the antiquities along the route he followed. The work is illustrated with lithographic illustrations made from photographs. These works as well as the official gazettes are printed by lithography. This new and somewhat inaccurate and unnecessary process at the present age, for the cutting of Arabic characters, which the Persians use, has been often done, and several volumes have been printed in India in the Persian language from metal types. But the Persians, with their exquisite aesthetic feeling cannot become habituated to type printing, as it is less soft, flowing and flexible than the written character. Hence the preference for lithography, which approximately gives them the delicate touches of the calligraphic art. A skillful scribe writes out each page as it is to appear in the printed copy. This is photographed on a stone with a prepared surface.—S. W. G. Benjamin.

Mistaken Treatment of Colds.

The Monthly Magazine (London) reports Dr. Graham as saying that it is not a correct practice, after a cold is caught, to make the room a person sits in much warmer than usual to increase the quantity of bed clothes, wrap up in flannel, and drink a large quantity of hot tea, gruel or other slops, because it will invariably increase the feverishness and in the majority of instances prolong rather than lessen the duration of the cold. It is well known that confining inoculated persons in warm rooms will make their smallpox more violent by augmenting the general heat and fever, and it is for the same reason that a similar practice in the present complaint is attended with analogous results, a cold being in reality a slight fever. In some parts of England, among the lower class of the people, a large glass of cold spring water, taken on going to bed, is found to be a successful remedy, and in fact many medical practitioners recommend a reduced atmosphere and frequent draughts of cold air as the most efficacious remedy for a recent cold, particularly when the patient's habit is full and plethoric.

Hotel "Chair Warmers."

"Chair warmers" are quite abundant this winter. Look into a hotel office almost any day and it will be noticed that all the chairs are occupied and that there are people pacing about who can't get a chair to sit down. Most people are not regular or even irregular gamblers. They haven't any where to go. It keeps out of the cold and so drop into the hotels. Many of them are poor devils out of work. Some of them look as if they are starving. Others twitch about nervously and occasionally get up and take a turn around the room, a third class drink. Most of them are respectable looking. The drinking element is quite large. Some have newspapers or magazines and some have paper covered books. The rest for lounge and bums in general are the chief with which they have provided themselves only getting up to move when the sweepers come around with their dusters and brooms to gather up the dirt and litter on the floor. The same people are to be seen day after day, and they are as familiar to the hotel clerks as those of the fashionable guests.—St. Paul Globe-Press.

That is, tried to. We set the grass on fire, and would have accomplished a vast amount of clearing, but long effort was futile, for it was confined. WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, [illegible]

The past week in Congress has not been one of great importance in legislative matters, but both houses of Congress have discussed questions of much at subject of tariff legislation has been settled, at least so far as the action of the present Congress is concerned. From the Congressional correspondence between Messrs. Carlisle and Randall it is evident that the act [illegible] will be little. Neither party will concede a point, and it is plain that the democratic majority in the House has had to recede the positions before the public and was not willing to yield the hope of reaching a basis for tariff legislation. The relegation of tariff legislation to the future brings up the question of an extra session of Congress. Idle money is accumulating in the national coffers at the remarkable rate of $100,000,000 a year, and the American voter, whether Democrat or Republican, does not need to be a financier to know that it is not business like to hoard so much dead capital. An extra session will doubtless be called possibly soon after the adjournment of the present Congress, but it is the opinion in political circles that the extra session will not be convened until the first of October.

There is much speculation as to whom the President will appoint Railroad Commissioners under the provision of the Interstate Commerce Act. Many have called the attention to Washington, but only two can be chosen. The President is very much pestered with the importunities of [illegible] of various influence and distinction, but their suits are not to which ignored. We congressional doubtless regrets that Congress by passing the bill did not make a provision that this commission should be chosen under civil service rules and by competitive examination.

It has been said that Colonel Morrison has been offered the chairmanship of the commission, also that he has been offered the Secretaryship of the Treasury Department, which Mr. Manning is expected to resign in the early spring. Many other things are said and denied but they have to deal with rumors more than rumor and I will not repeat them.

Notwithstanding the closeness of the final hour of this session it is believed by many that Congress will pass a bill changing inauguration day from Hyperborean fourth of March to the Madrigal thirtieth of April. There are perhaps not less than one hundred bald headed members and senators of the present Congress with President's bees buzzing in their bonnets. To them the vision of riding down the Avenue, bare headed, from the White House to the Capitol on a windy fourth of March is not an agreeable episode in their political air castles. They will form a powerful nucleus for the passage of the bill and what ever may be their motives the country and humanity will be benefited if the proposed bill becomes a law. Its passage must be in the nature of an amendment to the constitution, and therefore must be ratified by the legislative assemblies of two thirds of the states. Hence the importance of passing it at the present session, in order that it may be in time to receive ratification and take effect with the inauguration of the President on the fourth of April 1889. The passage of such a bill would be of great benefit to the country, in that it would protract the short session of Congress, which now adjourns on the fourth of March.

The country has grown so great, its interests have become so complex, that the annual legislative term of congress, as intended by the founders, is too short. Of course it will be good for congressmen and newspaper people that congress should meet every year and sit the same as all else the legislature and the executive branches of the government, and then, if need be, adjourn and then, if need be, recalled with big expense money to the country, stop that congress [illegible] [illegible]

The youngsters spent a very pleasant evening at the home of Miss Chick Easlick, on Friday night of last week.

The Elocution and Musical entertainment Monday evening was quite largely attended, and would have been much larger had not a report been circulated that Miss Patton could not get here in time, she having sent a telegram in the morning saying there was no train out of Chicago Sunday night; and to need her in Tecumseh Monday night. As soon as the necessary arrangements could be made, a conveyance went to Adrian and met her on the 4 o'clock P. M. train, and she arrived here in time to fill her engagement. The musical part of the entertainment furnished by Mrs. Hoggeman, Misses Barrow and Jackson, was very fine.

The surprise party at G. W. Allen's for Miss Rena, on the night of Feb. 8th, was a complete success. The event of the evening was the mock marriage of Miss Grace Wisner and Wm. E. Spaulding. Although no one had thought of it at all half an hour previous to the event, the improvised costumes and the arrangements were nearly as perfect as if the parties had drilled especially for it. The party entered to the soft strains of the wedding march. The ceremony was performed by E. E. Wisner, with suitable dignity and solemnity, clad in long flowing, capacious sleeved priestly robes. The bride in snowy attire with fresh blooming flowers and the conventional veil, was as sweet a bride as the best article could be, and the usual bride-maids and groomsmen were all that could be desired. A bountiful supper of pastry, cold meats and coffee was served, the quantity of the repast doing great credit to the culinary skill of the young ladies present.

Another pleasant surprise occurred Feb. 15, at E. E. Whedon's. This was a tin party, [illegible] meeting of the mothers of Mr. and Mrs. Whedon, their sisters, brothers, nieces and nephews. Papers were set down to the sumptuous dinner prepared for them. A SCHOOL OF JOURNALISM.

There is a possibility of a way of bridging the gulf between authors and editors. A School of Journalism is in actual existence and as soon you get [illegible] This will be surprising news to most of your readers, but we come news as well, particularly to those who have seen their fond hopes decay in the mouldering leaves of a rejected manuscript. Instead of wasting lead pencils and paper and stamps in sending voluntary contributions to publishers whose tables are already growing overfed, let the young writer hereafter save the pennies until a tuition fee shall have been accumulated and then begin the study of a writer's work in a proper manner. It is a privilege sometimes to pay for a thing long desired, and the prediction is well-based that all young writers who contemplate the life of the journalist or author, will hail with glad surprise the advent of so important and beneficient an institution as a "School of Journalism." The school is located on Cass Avenue, and is conducted by Mrs. M. L. Rayne, the well known journalist, the author of "What can a Woman Do?" "Written for You," and other eminent works. Reporting, editorial writing, book reviewing, sketch-writing, proof-reading and all other work incident to the profession of a journalist, is included in the course. It is of serious importance that all persons aspiring to be writers should be conversant with English grammar, spelling and rhetoric. But unfortunately, for themselves, and the editor, a very large per cent. of undeveloped literarians played marbles or went skating during the hours for those essential recitations. Hence the necessity of introducing a department of rhetoric and English literature. The school has been running a year and though the original intent on the part of its projector was to strengthen, assist, and encourage women who possess the desire and resolution to enter the field of letters, yet it is open to both sexes of any age. Mrs. Rayne has many pupils scattered between the city of Washington and the State of Nebraska, who are taking lessons by mail. While laboring to a great disadvantage, as the pupil must miss the lectures before the class, an all important feature, there is much to be gained in this attendance by proxy however. Especially to the inexperienced writer, as the manuscript can be sent in for criticism and revision. Thus far the school, though of a comparatively private nature, has received flattering patronage, numbering among its pupils a cousin of "Sidney Luska" the rising New York author who wrote recently the successful novel "As it is Written." He is a lineal descendant of Lord Byron and a relation of Bancroft the historian. Here also was criticised and revised the MS. for one of the most successful books ever written by a Michigan lady.

It is a much needed institution. The first and only School of Journalism in the world and young writers may well take up their pen again to call lost resolution and compel circumstances to render possible its available history. [illegible]

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSONS.

Lesson for February 27th.

INSTRUCTION OF SCHOOL. Gen. XIX. 15-26.

[illegible] are here. Apparently the two who were engaged to the two sons-in-law spoken of before, but who were not yet married to them. Without the city. All the houses were compact within the city walls, and none outside. The plain. The suburbs, by indicates that this is what the broad valley of the Jordan was called. My lord. Equivalent to sir. "Lest evil overtake me."—Perhaps he feared robbery in the unprotected open country of the mountains. No one will sleep with his family especially outside a city wall unprotected, if possible. "My soul shall live."—That is I shall live. "Zoar." Meaning A Little One. The city is supposed to have been near the southern end of the Dead Sea. "Brimstone and fire." Not necessarily the chemical substance brimstone, but a supernatural destruction by fire, whether by volcanic action, or by a conflagration of gas or bitumen at the "slime pits" from which the "pitch," or bitumen, or "slime," or coal oil, by whatever name it may be called, was taken. Doubtless the Dead Sea was there long before, and there is no evidence or likelihood that the cities are beneath the water. "His wife looked back." Not merely turned her head, but stopped, lingered, perhaps, turned back. "A pillar of salt."—She was killed while she waited, and became covered with the incrustation of some sort.

Instructions. There are times when all one can do is to shake the dust off his feet and leave the wicked. These were Christ's orders in reference to those who refused to receive his disciples after they had been warned. It will not do to stay in bad company too long, even to reform them. There came a time when God would be patient with Sodom no longer, and he had to leave it. Keep out of bad company. You may warn them, but don't stay with them.

He "lingered." That was dangerous. He had lived in Sodom so long that he had got to love it. He did not want to leave it. Evil communications had almost corrupted his good manners. Don't hang around bad places. Hurry from them. There is death there.

Many a man has been destroyed because he kept bad company. They have been consumed in the iniquity of other people. One man's sin drags down others besides himself. That is the reason for getting out of their company.

The Lord is merciful. He takes us by the hand, as he did Lot's family, and saves us from destruction. Let us hold his hand and we shall be safe.

A thorough and complete escape from temptation and sin is more than most folks want. They do not want to escape clear to the mountains. If they can't have Sodom they would like Zoar. They will give up if they must, one sin, but cling to another, saying "is it not a little one?" It is not safe to stay in even the smallest city of the Plain of sin; escape to the mountains.

Abraham's prayer for Sodom was heard as long as he prayed, only he did not pray long enough. So even Lot's prayer for Zoar was heard, although there was not one righteous man in it. The prayer of the good may save the wicked.

Sodom and Gomorrah are [illegible] only [illegible] that God has [illegible] for their wickedness. It was [illegible] wicked. Babylon was [illegible] Babylon. It was so well that the prophets of God [illegible] [illegible] Babylon is [illegible]

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT BATTLE

BY REV. A. W. KNAPPEN.

The grand opportunity long waited for, and for which so many people have long prayed and labored has come at last. It is now for us to be apathetic, faithless or faithful to God.

The friends of God and the home have now a chance to give the liquor traffic a death blow. The pestiferous, dishonoring, man destroying and God defying scourge of the state can be outlawed and forever. What an opportunity to strike a whole calendar and make our adjacent days to tell. What a tremendous lever of power can each of my readers wield? Nothing like it has occurred in Michigan since the fifty years struggle of the patriotic fathers to overcome hateful slavery and rebellion. The issue involved and wrong on this burning question will be a disgrace and a crime. For Christians to be stagnant, divided on it will indeed be reparable damage upon the church of God and for Methodists to vote against the "Amendment" will be to disown and defy their denomination's highest authority, and bring upon themselves everlasting contempt. For anything the general conference has ever done is better known and more publicly put and urged than its view in favor of constitutional and statutory prohibition. It is not too much to say that the world, yea and all Methodists whatever course others may take, will labor earnestly for the adoption of the amendment in this nonpartisan way.

But it is easy to know that a large share of the members of the other denominations and not a few Catholics, and many who belong to no church will battle in opposite ways. The great work is to see to votes, no matter about their name or antecedents.

BEER AND RAM MUST BE CARRIED.

Such effort has never yet failed. Never could. The days of the match are gone. As we succeed or fail our sincere endeavors will be seen by all who know the tidal wave which is sweeping on and over the country must not be checked by our half hearted efforts. I repeat, the most serious consequences hang on our action for the next six short weeks. These weeks ought therefore to be filled with prayer and effort on this single line. It is no time to be "goodish" and unpractical, but the time of all times to be wise and alert and self sacrificing to the end that we may all rejoice together in a common and glorious triumph. Nothing can be more patriotic, philanthropic, Christian or pious for the next few weeks, than to be found working and praying for the success of the amendment. Nor will success be gained without systematic and heroic effort. It will be no mere skirmish, but a general engagement, a tremendous battle between good and wicked forces. There will be some need of rallying the last man to every voting precinct. Every church and school house and newspaper and temperance society and saint and worker and believer in prayer should be enlisted to the uttermost. The king's business demands haste.

Let none think we are to have a walk over. Our enemies are bitter, cutting, determined, united, determined, and unscrupulous. The liquor traffic of the whole country is back of them, supplying money and arguments and tricks and experienced agents. In a word, it is delving and shooting them on. Their work will be largely secret and direct for, carried on by the saloons by means of bribery, corruption and bewitching and demoralizing generally. In the cities and towns they will work the powers of their influence and get out in the rural districts. If we can send them to our temperance societies and preachers to put our case plainly before the people, we may win a speedy triumph for the right. But we must take nothing for granted, but assume that every vote will be gained with the utmost care and labor. Let every one, male and female, of the state, rally as never before, and we must ardently desire and pray, I believe that such a battle as Maine, Kansas and Rhode Island fought is impossible, only fewer or because the enemy is better organized and more desperate and supplied with more money. Can we not fight as hard for the glory of Christ, our home, family and the welfare of our blood-bought country and freedom as do our enemies for the gratification of diseased appetite and greed for money.

[illegible] us organize immediately in every town and ward. Let us scatter truth and inspiration by every means, everywhere. Let us quit our plans, and close up our ranks. Let us show [illegible] all parties to adopt such a line of policy as that all who are opposed to the ravages of the saloon can act and work together. Let all [illegible] by gone partisan and party prejudice, this work of the amendment, [illegible] with one whole soul and mind, [illegible] great and rare opportunities call for [illegible] and heroic and [illegible] eclipse our struggles and triumphs in this great movement for God, home and native land. What a privilege to take an active part in such a noble undertaking. Who can hold back with such motives to urge us on? Let us see who can best work and best pray. The amendment movement have proved dice and procedure and enthusiasm over most other things. It is inspiring to know that so many hearts beat in unison with ours on this great subject. A goodly pause are laid for making our battle hot and decisive by starting up the preachers, churches, temperance societies and societies and including the most effective workers in the nation to come to our assistance and roll up a majority of 40,000, if possible, against the murderers of Hadleys and his kind. Let us welcome and support all such as give their whole time to this great temperance agitation and reform. Theirs is a noble calling. They deserve pecuniary reward, high honor and active sympathy and hearty cooperation. Let us open the way for them, open it quickly and widely. It will soon be too late to do anything. Town meetings will tell the story of the great struggle between virtue and vice, and God grant that victory may perch on our temperance standards. The cause of prohibition throughout the land needs not only victory, but an overwhelming one, one that shall carry joy to our friends, and dismay to our enemies. Every one can do something, many can accomplish wonders. Let us honor every means of making temperance sentiment. Let us try to stir the heart of every one, convince the judgment, quicken the conscience, secure the votes, amend the constitution and protect our imperiled homes.

Excitement in Texas.

Great excitement has been caused in the vicinity of Paris, Tex., by the remarkable recovery of Mr. J. E. Corley, who was so helpless he could not turn in bed or raise his head, every attention. A trial bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery was sent him. Finding relief, he bought a large bottle and a box of Dr. King's New life Pills, by the time he had taken two boxes of Pills and two bottles of the Discovery, he was well and had gained in flesh thirty six pounds.

"George Gould says he has discovered that marriage is a serious matter," remarked Hoobs. "I could have told him so much long ago," replied Foobs sadly, as he stroked the bruise made by a flatiron.

A Great Battle

Is continually going on in the human system. The demon of impure blood strives to gain victory over the constitution to ruin health, to drag victims to the grave. A good reliable medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla is the weapon with which to defend ones self, drive the desperate enemy from the field, and restore peace and bodily health, for many years. Try this popular medicine.

A series of practical talks to girls has begun in Boston. With our girls the most practical talk is the proposal.

Everybody needs a spring medicine. By using Ayer's Sarsaparilla, the blood is thoroughly cleansed and invigorated, the appetite stimulated, and the system prepared to resist the diseases peculiar to the summer months. Ask for Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Take no other.

TENEMENT CIGARS.

SICKENING SCENES AMONG THE

Helen Campbell's Story of the Children at Work in the Tenement Houses of a York—Disease and Death in the Back to the cigar making trade the women and girls turn during the dull season and one finds it impossible from every trade in which women are engaged. The sewing women employed are not now filling manufactories during the regular cigarmakers' quarantine, enforced by the trade. In the case of one, it was simply with regular workers that the loft was filled one room, a little less than [illegible] feet square, full of seven persons, three of them children under 10, all girls. The [illegible] on the floor and [illegible] the blue cloud of smoke that [illegible] were [illegible] a smell dominating that from the sinks and from the general [illegible] of this room but of the house as a whole. I went the climax set on the floor stripping the leaves and another on a small stool. A girl of about [illegible] years, and all alike had sores on lips and cheeks and on the hands.

THE LITTLE TOTS AT WORK.

Children from 5 or 6 years up can be taught to strip and thus add to the week's income, which is far less for the tenement house manufacture than for regular factory work, the latter averaging from $8 to $12 a week. But the work if done at home can be made to include the entire family, and some 4,000 women are engaged in it an almost equal but unregistered number of young children sharing it with them. As in sewing a number of women often club together, using one room, and in such cases their babies crawl about in the filth on the wet floors, playing with the damp tobacco and breathing the poison with which the room is saturated.

Here, as in tobacco factories, women and girls of every age become speedily the victims of nervous and hysterical complaints, the direct result of an atmosphere which succeeds in these cases consumption and thread diseases resulting from the dust. Canker is one of the most frequent difficulties, and sores of many orders, the trade involving more dangers than any that can be chosen. Yet because an entire family can find occupation in it, with no necessity for leaving home, it is often preferred to easier employment. It is the children who suffer most, growth being stunted, nervous disease developed and ending often in St. Vitus dance, and skin diseases of every order being the rule, the causes being not only tobacco, but the filth in which they live.

THE POISON OF PREPARATION.

It is doubtful if the most inveterate smoker would feel much relish for the cigar manufactured under such conditions, yet hundreds of thousands go out yearly from these houses, bearing in every leaf the poison of their preparation. In this one house nearly thirty children of all ages and sizes, babies predominating, rolled on the tobacco which covered the floor and was piled in every direction, and of these children under 10 thirteen were strippers and did their share of work of ten hours and more. Physical deterioration is its worst form from the inevitable. Even the factory child worker fares better for in the factory there is exercise, the going to and from work, while in the tenement house cigar making the worn out little creatures crawl to the door, often only a pile of rags in the corner of the room, on a heap of the tobacco dust, breathing the poison day and night uninterruptedly.

Years of every order found in each loft, and naturally in the trade, at the lowest ebb. Nervous excitement is so intense, can result, and the child of six lives as grave and confirmed an offender as the full grown man or woman. Infrequent search discovers few exceptions to this rule, and the whole matter has reached a stage where legislative interference is absolutely indispensable. Only in forbidding tenement house manufacture absolutely can there be any safety for either consumer or producer.—Helen Campbell in New York Tribune.

For Humanitarians to Think Over.

If any one will take the trouble to look at facts as shown by statistics, it will be found at once that there are four boys needing the care of the state to one girl. This can be readily proved by the experience of all the societies above alluded to by the reports of state schools elsewhere and by records of the courts. As there are probably as many girls as boys born into the world, one naturally seeks a reason for this state of things which is easily found in the following clauses. First in case of death or disaster to parents, friends and relatives are always more ready to take the girls than the boys.

Girls are more easily controlled, more helpful in the house and it is a common experience that when a family is left destitute the neighbors will offer homes to the girls, while the boys are left to shift for themselves. Secondly even in poor families more safeguards are thrown about girls.

A mother who will let her small boy 10 or 12 years spend his entire time out of school and up to 10 p. m. loafing about the streets will keep the girl of the same age carefully at home, helping about the house under her own supervision, and if the boy becomes a vagrant and she loses control of him, the girl grows up hard working and respectable, and meeting no temptation to the contrary.

"Wrong Foot Foremost."

You put out the left wrong foot before, said the mother at the breakfast table to her daughter, as she left the room. But she could hear the sob in her daughter's throat. The girl had been [illegible] the morning. [illegible] the poison of the [illegible] stopped the poison from the stomach to [illegible] the [illegible] the [illegible] the [illegible] some were [illegible] in the [illegible] in [illegible] the [illegible] the [illegible] the

THE GREAT DEADWOOD MYSTERY.

BY BRET HARTE.

[Copyrighted 1886, by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., and published by arrangement with them.]

PART I.

IT was growing quite dark in the telegraph office at Cottonwood, Tuolumne county, California. The office, a lath-like excrescence, was separated from the public room of the Miners' Hotel by a board partition, and the operator, who was also postmaster of Cottonwood, had closed his window, and was lounging by his news stand preparatory to going home. Without, the first monotonous rain of the season was dripping from the porches of the hotel in the waning light of a December day. The operator, accustomed as he was to long intervals of silence, was thus becoming bored.

The tread of muffled feet on the veranda, and the entrance of two men, offered a momentary excitement. He recognized in the strangers two prominent citizens of Cottonwood, and their manner betokened business. One of them proceeded to the desk, wrote a dispatch, and handed it to the other interrogatively.

"That's about the way the thing plants," responded his companion assentingly.

"I reckoned it only spare to use his identical words."

"That's so."

The first speaker turned to the operator with the dispatch.

"How soon can you shove her through?"

The operator glipped professionally over the address and the length of the dispatch.

"Now," he answered promptly.

"And the rights there?"

"To-night. But there's no delivery till to-morrow."

"Shove her through to-night, and say there's an extra twenty left here for delivery."

"Shove her through to-night."

The operator, accustomed to all kinds of extravagant outlay for expedition, replied that he would lay this proposition, with the dispatch, before the San Francisco office. He then took it and read it—and re-read it. He preserved the usual professional apathy—had doubtless sent many more enigmatical and mysterious messages—but, nevertheless, when he finished, he raised his eyes inquiringly to his customer. That gentleman, who enjoyed a reputation for equal spontaneity of temper and revolver, met his gaze a little impatiently. The operator had recourse to a trick. Under the pretext of misunderstanding the message, he obliged the sender to repeat it aloud for the sake of accuracy, and even suggested a few verbal alterations, ostensibly to insure correctness, but really to extract further information. Nevertheless, the man doggedly persisted in a literal transcript of his message. The operator went to his instrument hesitatingly.

"I suppose," he added half questioningly, "there ain't no chance of a mistake. This address is Rightbody, that rich old Bostonian that everybody knows. There ain't but one?"

"That's the address," responded the first speaker coolly.

"Didn't know the old chap had investments out here," suggested the operator, lingering at his instrument.

"No more did I," was the insufficient reply.

For some few moments nothing was heard but the click of the instrument, as the operator worked the key, with the usual appearance of imparting confidence to a somewhat reluctant hearer who preferred to talk himself. The two men stood by, watching his motions with the usual awe of the uninitiated. When he had finished they laid before him two gold pieces. As the operator took the money he could not help saying,

"The old man went off kinder sudden, didn't he? Had no time to write?"

"Not sudden for that kind o' man," was the exasperating reply.

But the speaker was not to be disconcerted. "If there is an answer," he began.

"There ain't any," replied the first speaker, quickly.

"Why?"

"Because the man to whom you sent the message is dead."

"Dead!—suddenly?" appealed the first speaker, with curiosity.

"Only as we witnesses," replied the other.

The operator dropped his eyelids. The business was finished, and a great stillness relaxed. He applied to the operator, and turned for other news, his pressing avocations impelled. When their glasses were filled, simply the first speaker, with a general condemnation of the Indians and the weather, apparently dismissed all previous topics to drink to the health of the absent Rightbody. At the same time the other stolidly assented.

When that toast was drunk and the first speaker, however, considering the night cold, embellished it with a supplement, the operator repeated his question, and shook his head.

There justice. A puff of wind swept through the pines, and struck a faint, Eolian response from the wires above their heads, and then all the darkness again seemed settled upon Cottonwood.

The message lagged a little at San Francisco, but got half an hour at Chicago and fought lustily for the whole way, so that it was past midnight when the "all night" operator took it from the wires at Boston. But [illegible] San Francisco office, and a messenger was procured, who sped with it through dark snow bound streets, between the high walls of close-shuttered warehouses, into certain formal square, ghostly with snow-covered [illegible] a reserved and quiet looking mansion, and pulling a bell, [illegible] reflective pause, wildly conjectured that the fact that a stranger was waiting without—as he caught [illegible] the interest of the moment there was a slight glow from the windows. [illegible] with [illegible] which, he got behighted, as it were, some prolonged through silhouette [illegible] The other servant who took [illegible] and accepted it as a gravely [illegible] messenger a last will and testament, respectfully paused before the entrance of the drawing room. The sound of measured and rhetorical speech, through which the occasional rational comment of the New England coast struggled, as the only effect of nature not wholly repressed, came from its heavily-curtained recesses; for the occasion of the evening had been the reception and entertainment of various distinguished persons, and, as had been epigrammatically expressed by one of the guests, "the history of the country" was taking its leave in phrases more or less memorable and characteristic. Some of these valedictory axioms were clever, some witty, a few profound, but always left as a genteel contribution to the entertainer. Some had been already prepared, and, like a card, had served and identified the guest at other mansions.

The last guest departed, the first carriage rolled away, when the servant ventured to indicate the existence of the dispatch to his master, who was standing on the hearth rug in an attitude of wearied self-righteousness. He took it, opened it, read it, re-read it, and said:

"There must be some mistake. It is not for me. Call the boy, Waters."

Waters, who was perspiring, assure that the boy had left, nevertheless obediently walked toward the hall door, but was recalled by his master.

"No matter—at present."

"It's nothing serious, William?" asked Mrs. Rightbody, with languid maternal concern.

"No, nothing. Is there a light in my study?"

"Yes. But before you go, can you give me a moment or two?"

Mr. Rightbody turned a little impatiently toward his wife. She had thrown herself languidly on the sofa, her hair was slightly disarranged, and part of a slipped foot was visible. She might have been a finely formed woman, but even her careless dishabille left the general impression that she was severely flannelled throughout, and that any ostentation of womanly charm was under vigorous sanitary surveillance.

"Mrs. Marvin told me to-night that her son made no secret of his serious attachment for our Alice, and that, if I was satisfied, Mr. Marvin would be glad to confer with you at once."

The information did not seem to absorb Mr. Rightbody's wandering attention, but rather increased his impatience. He said lastly that he would speak of that to-morrow, and partly by way of repetition, and partly to dismiss the subject, added,

"Post-office James must pay more attention to the register and the thermometer. It was over 70 degs. to-night, and the ventilating draft was closed in the drawing room."

"That was because Professor Atmore is so nervous, and the orchids, you know, are so sensitive."

"He ought to know from Dr. Dyer that that systematic and regular exposure to draughts winnows the nervous incendiary while fixed at the sixty degrees his fidelity—"

"I am afraid, William," interrupted Mrs. Rightbody, with [illegible] of [illegible] daughter husband's hope with a view if there by dressing him from it. I'm afraid that people [illegible] appreciate the substitution of bouillon for punch and [illegible]. I observed that Mr. Spondee declined it, and I noticed looked disappointed. The thrums and water in liqueur glasses passed quite unnoticed too."

"And yet each half drachm contained the half digested substance of a pound of beef. I'm surprised at Spondee," continued Mr. Rightbody, aggrievedly. "Exhausting the brain and nerve force by the highest creative efforts of the Muse, he prefers partially digested and flavored with carbonic acid gas. Even Mrs. Paringway admitted to me that the sudden lowering of the temperature of the stomach by the introduction of ice—"

"Yes, but she took a lemon ice at the last Dorcas reception, and asked Dyer if he thought that the lower animals [illegible] food at a temperature over sixty."

There is a young man of the "didn't know it was loaded" kind right here in Tecumseh, but as yet no serious consequences have resulted. Will Van Antwerp returned from a hunting expedition last Monday and left his gun standing in his father's restaurant. His younger brother Charley picked it up after he went out and pointing it at a young lady present, said, "look out, now, I am going to hang you one," and pulled the trigger. The gun did not explode that time or the next but the third time he pointed it at a cat with serious results. The young gentleman found no trace of that kind of a cat here long.

We owe Mrs. F. C. Rector an apology. In speaking of her contribution to the Farmer's Institute, the types made us say "contribulation." That word can not be found in the dictionary, we admit, and we do not care to have the credit of coining it in such a connection. The proof reader wore his old specs last week.

A number of school girls have formed a league, in which they bind themselves by a pledge not to recognize or accept the company of any young man who drinks, uses tobacco or swears. The league starts out with ten or a dozen charter members. The members are all handsome, smart and refined young ladies, and they mean business. We presume the boys will come to time, if the girls will bind themselves to control their curiosity and eschew the use of gum.

Mrs. Gage desires us to correct an erroneous impression conveyed in our account of the Mother Goose entertainment last week. She disclaims the credit given her. The work of drilling the rehearsals, getting up the costumes and arranging the music, which involved an immense amount of labor, was mostly done by taken charge of by Mrs. Dr. Woodward, Mrs. H. E. Stout, and Miss Jennie Rose "Hence to whom honor." That is our opinion and hence we make the correction.

THE LIBRARY ENTERTAINMENT.

The entertainment given at J. D. Shull's last Tuesday evening was unique in character and was listened ... of the program was the esthetic sunflower. A screen concealed one corner of the back parlor and upon this screen were fastened several huge sunflowers. Behind this was a movable center piece, and when the choruses were sung, a face appeared from behind the screen in the center of each sunflower. The chorus consisted of Mrs. Bidwell, Mrs. Morley, Misses Rawson and DeWolf and Messrs Carkin, Rawson, Bigelow and Frank. Mrs. Washington and Lady Washington were present, attired in the costume of "ye olden time." These characters were very happily personified by Prof. Hammond and Mrs. Geo. Tiffany. The program was announced by Mr. A. W. Mills in the following order.

1. Solo and Chorus—I'm a young man.
2. Trio, Piano, Flute and Violin—Misses Clara and Mabel and Levi Hayden.
3. Solo and Chorus—I see My Love at the Window.
4. History of Washington and his Times—P. S. McKinnon.
5. Duet and Chorus—The Moon Light over All.
6. Piano Solo—Miss Blanche Mead.
7. Chorus by four male voices—Spanish Guitar. This elicited a hearty encore, and the full chorus responded with the Duke of York.

Miss Jennie Root executed the piano accompaniments and it is needless to say that that part of the program was well carried out. In the role of historian, Mr. McKinnon surprised his most ardent admirers. For historical accuracy, poetic reality, blood-curdling pathos and fictional imagery, his sketch took—well—it carried off the entire pantry, cold chicken and all.

At the close of the program, the sunflowers were sold and cakes and ice cream were disposed of in the dining room. Many of the young people tarried until a late hour and passed the remainder of the evening in social enjoyment. The net proceeds added a goodly plum to the treasury of the Library Association.

BOSTON STAR CONCERT COMPANY.

Those of our citizens, who, owing to the dismal and stormy night, were brave enough to visit the opera house Thursday evening, were well rewarded, by being allowed to listen to one of the finest, if not the finest, concert that was ever given in this city. Mr. Walter Emerson, the world renowned cornetist, who is at the head of this "Constellation of stars," is not alone a national but an inter national reputation as a cornet virtuoso. Mr. Emerson has a wonderful power of engaging the hearts of the people with the pure sweet tones of his cornet and of transporting the soul for the time being, to a land of bliss. So great is his power of tone painting, and the proper interpretation and rendition of the numbers presented. His "Elsinoian polka" was delivered in a masterly manner, and as no other than Mr. Emerson could do. Even the old sacred piece known as "Martyr" was so beautifully rendered, as to hold the house in breathless suspense until the very end. Mr. Emerson was supported by three of the ablest artists. Mrs. Medora Henson Emerson, the soprano, gave some of her sweetest and most artistic selections. John Thomas, the inimitable humorist, was more than promised. And Nella Brown, proved herself to be one of the finest elocutionists that ever visited this city. Her recital of "The Bivouac on the battle field," to the sweet cadences of the "Starspangled banner" and "Home sweet Home," was simply superb. To say that this company was fully appreciated by all was proven, by the fact that every number was encored, not once, only, but many times, and in each and every case received a prompt and courteous response, by the rendition of something still finer than the previous number. In fact there was something to please everybody, and that every one could take away something good with them. All in all it was without doubt the finest concert Company that has ever visited our city, and it was the verdict of all who listened to them last Thursday evening, that "they want the Boston Star Co. to come again at no very distant date," when we bespeak for them a crowded house, for they richly deserve it.

Yesterday was Ash Wednesday, the beginning of Lent.

Since moving into my new quarters, I have added largely to my stock of caskets, coffins and funeral furnishings, and have the best facilities ever enjoyed by any dealer in Tecumseh in the line of undertaking. I have a hearse and bell attached to my store, and all night calls will be promptly and carefully attended to.

OBITUARY.

Another venerable pioneer has passed on to his final reward. Ezra F. Blood departed this life on the old homestead farm ... this village, in the mists of early morning, Tuesday, Feb. 15th. His funeral obsequies were attended on Thursday last at the Presbyterian church, where a large concourse of our older residents gathered around his bier to pay the last office of respect to the honored dead.

The deceased was born in Hillsboro, County, New Hampshire, Oct. 25th, 1798. He remained upon his father's farm, a diligent and dutiful son, until he arrived at his majority, when he moved to Jefferson Co., New York. There he resided until the spring of '34, when he joined a party of Western fortune hunters, whose destination was Tecumseh. He came with the pioneer party to this section, and on the 23d day of May, '34, he located the farm which afterwards became his home and where he saw the last of earth. Returning to Monroe for the balance of the party, he arrived again in Tecumseh on June 24, 1834, with the family of Musgrove Evans and others. The party passed their first night on the oak openings north of the river Raisin in Brownville. On that day Tecumseh became his home, and that relation remained ever after, until the Angel of Death cut the bond. From June 24 until January 12, 1835, he lived unmarried, improving his farm, erecting buildings and doing and making a home for his bride. On that date he married Miss Azuba Blackmar, and they at once began house keeping in the home which together they made beautiful and holy for more than fifty-seven years. During the early settlement of the country his generous heart and manly hand were ever ready to welcome and assist the new settler, freely giving his time and labor to smooth their rugged pathway, and by aid and kindness in health and sickness bringing joy and success to many a household.

An honest man, a faithful Christian, a zealous supporter of education, assisted by his noble and devoted wife, they and their worthy compeers made Tecumseh what it is, pre-eminent in enterprise, and its results, and carved out from the forest the beautiful farms and homes which dot our township and embellish the landscape like "apples of gold in pictures of silver." The last survivor of the original party of settlers, leaving of the few still left among the pioneers who came prior to 1836, he will be missed everywhere in his neighborhood and in our village where his noble form will be no longer seen in social gatherings and religious meetings. In his church where for so many years his Christian virtues and upright life have been a benison and example to both old and young, in his family, where his care and affection have been the solace and comfort of his wife and children, and where his example he has given in his declining days and pious resignation, has enshrined his memory in their hearts, in the minds of many an old resident who has been blessed with his charity and kindness in time of need.

Freed from the sufferings of earth he has gone to his eternal rest, to receive the reward of his noble deeds and to hear from that Heavenly Father Whom he delighted to worship, this welcome "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

[illegible] "Yes, [illegible] Maud, [illegible]

[illegible] "I think it intention."

[illegible] ended accent of the [illegible] again. "Do you would not mind telling me why [illegible]

"Because I am a burglar," answered [illegible]

There was an indistinct mutter which [illegible] have been an expletive. Then, after a silence, she once inquired, [illegible] formally "And might I ask what [illegible] to do with me?"

"Keep you shut up here until my brother [illegible] the gardener comes back; and then—"

"Yes, and then?"—

"Then," replied Maud with a sudden inspiration "we will let you go, if you will go peacefully."

There was a sound of suppressed laughter at this. Then the voice rejoined politely "Thanks. I will give you any assurance you require."

Maud went down to the dining room, where she busied herself in packing a basket. After this, returning up stairs, she called to her prisoner "Mr.—Mr. burglar."

"Yes."

"[illegible] you'll find a [illegible]"

"[illegible] and a well filled [illegible] through the [illegible] to my room." Maud hesitatingly [illegible]

"Thanks, not quite," was the drily [illegible] "If I might ask for a sample of Tom's cigars."

"I'm indeed! The wretch!" confided Tom's sister to herself. Then, aloud, "certainly if you will let the basket down again."

At this point Mrs. Estabrook remonstrated. "Really, Maud, that is too much."

"Oh, mamma, anything to keep him quiet and good tempered," said Maud. "And you know he was to have taken tea with us."

"But if he should burn the house down smoking them," anxiously suggested her daughter.

"Well, perhaps it's safer to give him something to use his matches with," answered Maud, with a masterly stroke of logic. "And they always do have matches," she concluded, indefinitely. Her reasoning carried the day, so the cigars went up and the rope came down, for this was a point on which Maud was firm. She had no intention of leaving that rope in their burglarious visitor's possession.

The evening waned, and still there was no sign of Peter's return. The two ladies did not dream of sleeping, but kept watch throughout the night in the room adjoining that of their prisoner, bracing themselves with strong tea for their task. It was weary work, however, and the minutes crept slowly into the small hours.

The hall clock had just struck the quarter before 2 when the silence of the house was disturbed by a little sound [illegible] unmistakably loud to their strained ears. Mrs. Estabrook sat erect to a pin, while Maud turned up the glimmering lamp. Again came the sound, slight but distinct, scratch, scratch, file, file.

"Maud, what is that noise?" said Mrs. Estabrook with the calmness of despair. Maud declined to commit herself positively.

"Maud," said her mother, "it's down at the piazza window. It sounds a good deal like that man in there. Oh, don't [illegible]"

Maud listened thoughtfully. Her mother's idea seemed only too plausible. "He's got around to the other entrance," Mrs. Estabrook [illegible] "and they'll be through the window and rob and 'murder' us all. Oh, dear, oh!"

"Don't, mamma, don't! [illegible] Maud [illegible] "[illegible] the piazza window [illegible] burglars [illegible] second story windows. I put the chairs against the back door, which [illegible] the door between the two bedrooms. What do you think, and the following con[illegible]

"Yes."

"[illegible] and [illegible] Maud [illegible]

"[illegible] Maud, what shall we do?" moaned Mrs. Estabrook, sinking into a seat.

"[illegible] Maud, "[illegible] would not move until a given time he would be released. As he readily agreed to the conditions the girl stole out into the passage, turned the key very softly, and then flew back into her own room, which [illegible] Here she knocked on the inner door, and at the appointed sign heard the young man dash through the corridor and down stairs. There was a sound of rattling chairs and tables, a vague yell, a pistol shot and then a period of complete silence during which the [illegible] through the hall door, and stopped outside the door of Tom's bachelor quarters, where a pause ensued.

"Miss Estabrook, I have come back," [illegible]

"[illegible] Maud, [illegible]

"Oh, I mean that I have [illegible] indulging from [illegible] and I [illegible] a retreat he will find prepared for any [illegible] of this business to-night."

"We are very much obliged to you," stammered Maud, rather at a loss what to say under the circumstances.

"Not at all. It was a pleasure to me. He was infringing on my rights, you know."

Silence followed, broken by another rap. "Miss Estabrook, I am waiting to be locked in again."

"Do you really mean"—began Maud.

"Certainly. I must insist, if you please. I'll stay here till you give me the word."

"Be quick, Maud," whispered Mrs. Estabrook, very distrustful of this extraordinary burglar. "The man is either a criminal or a lunatic. Run and turn the key, child, before he changes his mind."

Thus urged, the girl made another sortie. Once more the key clicked in the lock, their prisoner was heard to cross the floor, and then all was silence again.

Not for long, however. Suddenly there was a confused clamor at the outside door, while the bell pealed loudly through the house. Maud and her mother sprang up and faced each other.

"That man back again?" faltered Mrs. Estabrook.

"Oh, mamma, no," said Maud, reassuringly. "A burglar would never ring the bell. Why it's Tom!" she cried, with sudden conviction. "It's my brother come home!" she repeated, as a voice from the next room was heard, with redoubled efforts to attract attention.

[illegible] and very anxious about the safety of the household. As [illegible] the door of the early dawn, he hastily explained how, having called at to see Amelia, she had given him no peace until he promised to return at once to The Willows. How he had done so in such a hurry that he forgot his hat, his business, and everything had suddenly been driven out of his mind by the sight of a brief statement on the piazza. At which Maud stared, and was about to relate her version of the night's adventures when Mrs. Estabrook's voice was heard in reproachful accents from above. They hastened up stairs, and found the poor lady inclined to hysterics at being left alone. She began an incoherent story, in which Peter and the burglar were jumbled, to Tom's utter bewilderment.

"But who winged the burglar, then?" he asked. "Was it you, Maud?"

"Hush sh!" breathed his mother, with warning finger upraised. "He's in there, you know."

"In there! Why, I thought you said he was gone? And what on earth is Peter in there for?"

"No, no, not Peter, the—the burglar."

"The burglar?" Tom jumped up. "You don't mean you've trapped the fellow? Bravo!" And he was hurrying to the door, when his sister laid a hand on his arm.

"Oh, wait, Tom," she said. "That is the oddest part of it all." And she told the tale of their strange guest. "It doesn't seem like his being a burglar, but I don't think he can be in his right mind, and [illegible]"

"By jove! I should say not! Wanted to be locked up again! Why, the man must be a first class crank. Well, I'll have a look at him."

He left the room, and the two women heard the key turn in the lock. They held their breath to listen, but all they could distinguish in the hall was a confused jumble of voices and laughter. Presently Tom came back, accompanied by the [illegible] burglar.

"My mother and sister, Mr. Fellows," said Tom, with a wave of the hand and a twinkle of the eye. "Mother, this is my friend Mr. Fellows, who seems to think there is some mystery that needs clearing up."

The real burglar was never found. Therefore Tom Estabrook was unable to settle the question of that [illegible] stranger. Neither Mr. Marston Fellows in anything beyond the name. Even that had nearly disappeared before Mr. Fellows left The Willows, so that when Amelia first saw her future brother-in-law she gravely remarked that she could not imagine how mamma and Maud could have made such a singular mistake. She was sure she never could. Which from the cause of the which assumed at, was certainly never trying. But then Amelia [illegible] Kate Peter [illegible]

For some years I was a victim to Liver Complaint, in consequence of which I suffered from General Debility and Indigestion. A few boxes of Ayer's Pills restored me to perfect health.—W. T. Brightwell, Henderson, W. Va.

For years I have relied more upon Ayer's Pills than anything else to my bowels. These Pills are mild in action, and all they want, they do. I have used them with Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Rheumatism, and Dyspepsia.—G. F. Miller, Attleborough, Mass.

Ayer's Pills cured me of Stomach and Liver troubles, from which I had suffered for years. I consider them the best pills made, and would not be without them.—Morris Shaw, Downsville, N. Y.

I was attacked with Bilious Fever, which was followed by Jaundice, and I was so dangerously ill that my friends despaired of my recovery. I commenced taking Ayer's Pills, and soon regained my customary strength.—John C. Pattison, Lowell, Nebraska.

Last spring I suffered greatly from a troublesome humor on my side. In spite of every effort to cure this eruption, it increased until the flesh became entirely raw. I was troubled, at the same time, with indigestion, and distressing pains in

The Bowels.

By the advice of a friend I began taking Ayer's Pills. In a short time I was free from pain, my food digested properly, the sores on my body commenced healing, and, in less than one month, I was cured.—Samuel D. White, Atlanta, Ga.

I have long used Ayer's Pills, in my family, and believe them to be the best pills made.—S. C. Darden, Darden, Miss.

My wife and little girl were taken with Dysentery a few days ago, and I at once began giving them small doses of Ayer's Pills, thinking I would avoid a doctor if the disease became any worse. In a short time the [illegible] stopped, all pain was gone, and they were restored.—Theodore Ewing, Richmond, Va.

The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off of revenue stamps from Proprietary Medicines, no doubt has largely benefited the consumers, as well as relieving the burden of home manufactures. Especially is this the case with Green's August Flower and Boschee's German Syrup, as the reduction of thirty-six cents per dozen, has begun and led to increase the size of the bottles containing these remedies thereby giving one-fifth more medicine in the 75 cent size. The August Flower for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, and the German Syrup for Cough and Lung troubles, have perhaps, the largest sale of any medicine in the world. The advantage in increased size of the bottles will be greatly appreciated by the sick and afflicted, in every town and village in civilized countries. Sample bottles for 10 cents remain the same size.

The breath of a chronic catarrh patient is offensive to others, so that he cannot go into society and he becomes an object of disgust. After a time ulceration sets in, the lungs become attacked and frequently entirely destroyed. A constant source of disease forms the dripping of the purulent secretions into the throat, sometimes producing inveterate bronchitis which in its turn has been the exciting cause of pulmonary disease. The wonderful results which have attended its use for years past, prove it to be the best and only reliable remedy. Ely's Cream Balm is placed at the head of every catarrh remedy.

A Mexican Wife Abroad.

But when a foreigner marries a Mexican wife he ought to carefully to settle here, for it is very rare that his wife can live anywhere else. They miss the beautiful climate and pine for that universal courtesy and warmth of manner by which they have been surrounded in Mexico; they yearn for the lassies after and absence of all etiquette in habits, toilets, etc. In other countries they find themselves surrounded by women so differently educated as to be doubly strangers. A very few instances have been recorded of Mexican girls who have been married and then to Europe when very young who have acquired European ways of thinking and even prefer the land of adoption to their own, but these cases are so rare as scarcely to form exceptions. They are true patriots, for the visible horizon bounded their wishes. In France, Spain or Italy they might manage to exist, but in the United States or England they would be as much out of their natural element as fish out of water. An any climate and colder than the natures of the people, a harsh language also is impossible to acquire, a religion which they consider heretical, etiquette carried to excess, and insupportable order in the toilet—rebozos unknown, cigaritos considered barbarous—they feel like exiles from paradise and live only in hopes of return.—City of Mexico Letter.

Scott in the Mexican War.

His victories have never received the credit justly due them on account of the apparent ease with which they were gained. The student of military history will rarely meet with accounts of battles in any age where the actual operations coincide so exactly with the orders issued upon the eve of conflicts as in the official reports of the wonderfully energetic and successful campaign in which Gen. Scott, with a handful of men, relived the memory of the conquest of Cortes, in his triumphant march from Vera Cruz to the capital. The plan of the battle of Cerro Gordo was so fully carried out in action that the official report is hardly more than the general orders translated from the future tense to the past. The story of Chapultepec has the same element of the marvelous in it. The general commands apparent impossibilities in the closest detail on one day, and the next day reports that they have been accomplished. These successes were not cheaply attained. The Mexicans, though deficient in science and military intelligence, fought with bravery and sometimes with desperation. The enormous percentage of loss in his army proves that Scott was engaged in no light work.—The Century.

An Unfathomable Mystery.

I watched a woman weighing herself in a grocery store the other day. She had just purchased a pound package of saleratus and had it in her hand when she stepped on to the scales.

"Why, I've gained a pound!" she remarked to herself when she had finished [illegible]

Then, remembering her saleratus, she exclaimed:

"Oh, Lord! I forgot I had this," and hastily popped the package into her pocket.

Then she began to work the weights, and wondered why she could get no different result. When she left the store, with knitted brow, she was still evidently trying to fathom the mystery.—Pioneer Press "Listener."

Poet Whittier's Protest.

The autograph fiend has exhausted even the exemplary patience of Mr. Whittier, who has written to The Critic that he finds it impossible to reply to solicitations which reach him by every mail for autographs, notices of books and answers to questions on matters of no real interest to the writers or himself. He has neither time nor strength for the examination and criticism of manuscripts and cannot be responsible for the care of them. The letters of friends known and unknown are always welcome, and he trusts that his age and state of health will excuse an occasional delay in responding to them.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Game of Yellowstone Park.

A gentleman who has resided in the Yellowstone National park for many years and is well acquainted with its condition says that the game in the park is increasing while the number of settlers increases. At the present time there are two herds of buffalo aggregating about 120, there are about 5,000 elk, 200 of the mountain sheep, 50 moose, several hundred antelope, 600 blacktail deer, the streams contain many beaver, streams and lakes full of trout, mountain lions are frequently met with, wildcats and bears quite abundant, otter, martin and weasels quite plentiful.—New York Post.

Variations of a Single Form.

A spectroscopic study of the sun has given Professor J. N. Lockyer, the English astronomer, reason to believe that the substances now recognized as elements are not necessarily simple, but that, as professor William Crookes pointed out in a physical sense, they may be compounded of a primal matter of which the elements observed are only variations of one form.

Pardee Medicine Co.

GENTLEMEN—Nearly all winter I confined to my room with rheumatism. I procured a bottle of Pardee's Rheumatic Remedy, taking it for a severe pain in the joints and the pain left me, and I gained in strength and weight, seeming to pass out of my disease completely cured. A few days after I commenced taking your medicine my throat did not ache and I found to be better, since taking it I occurred to me to use it as a wash for head, and to my great surprise I improved rapidly, and to-day am free from both rheumatism and catarrh. I consider it not possible as a good medicine. I take one teaspoonful at breakfast and find it a good tonic. I would advise you to recommend it to gargle for throat troubles and catarrh, for I know it will cure. I have seen some remarkable cures from the use of this remedy, and it is my duty to recommend it to all.

I am, very truly yours,

A WORD ON THE AMENDMENT

EDITOR OF THE HERALD:

There are many in this, and presumably in every community in the state, who are undecided as to their political duty in reference to the constitutional amendment question. The partisan press of the state, the acknowledged educators of the people, as to their political duties are notably silent, and at a time when something like a thoroughly candid, dispassionate editorial from every organ of the party would be highly appreciated by many, other than those who are undecided. Whatever the attitude of the parties or political organizations may be, it appears to persons of ordinary intelligence as no more than reasonable, that the entire party press of the state should speak out with no uncertain sound. The fact that the people are to decide for themselves, does not in the least afford immunity to a large and influential body of men, who are of the people and whose religious duty it is to stand up for the people. Indeed, not does it afford any excuse for their apparent selfishness in remaining silent or indifferent as to the outcome of so important and a measure, presumably because it has not been submitted as a party measure.

It must be held that every voter, high or low, should feel his individual responsibility for good government and officers have no adequate conception of the importance of the [illegible] of Blank. Duty to the people whose [illegible] voters who can only be reached by their respective political party organs. The question at issue must be admitted to be a political one, because it involves the enactment and enforcement of [illegible] regard as a legitimate instrument in promoting temperance, as well as any needed reform. And having been submitted to a vote of the people in a constitutionally supported by any member of any political party who is not bound hand and foot and can do no other than vote for the continuance of the license system.

It is not a party fight in any sense, and matter what may have been the causes leading up to the submission, and no matter as to party organizations, whether the amendment carries or does not carry, it can, in the nature of the case, have no immediate effect to make or unmake any party.

It is a step in the right direction, and is a contest between the moral positive and intelligent forces of the country on the one hand, and the ignorant and vicious classes of our large towns and cities on the other. It is a contest to settle the question—"Shall the moral and intelligent forces of this country rule the nation?" It is one of the many steps to be taken in the final struggle with the rum power, which has begun, and which is as irrepressible as was the struggle between freedom and slavery; it is only another struggle between right and wrong in which the home loving, God fearing people are arrayed against the friends and supporters of a traffic which has become the most destructive force the world has known. And there can be no doubt that the whole power of the traffic in all the states will be massed in this one state to defeat votes and defeat the will of the people in this conflict. The men who are engaged in this traffic impelled by a greed of gain, and led on by the craving of an army of millions of its votaries and victims, have become aggressive and defiant, and it is an alarming fact having become more and more apparent during the past 20 years that this "organized and legalized drink villainy" is threatening the very life of the nation. In view of these facts how important that every means that can be utilized for good, be brought to bear against the forces Rum, Riot and Rebellion.

It becomes the duty of all right minded citizens without regard to party, church or creed, to place themselves where there can be no shifting responsibility on the issue, for the traffic, being dishonorable and disreputable, the men who are engaged in it will resort to every means and instrumentality in their power, however dishonest and disreputable, to perpetuate their atrocious business.

RIDGEWAY, Mich.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D.C. Feb. 18, '87.

Congress has accomplished very little during the week in the way of important national legislation. The people of Washington are well satisfied with what has been done, however inasmuch as considerable progress was made with local affairs in which they are much interested. Washington is the "protege" of Congress. The District of Columbia is governed entirely by Congress, is dependent and compelled to look to Congress for everything. Naturally it thinks Congress never does enough for it, and is a chronic complainant of neglect.

It is thought that the President's veto of the Dependent Pension bill will be sustained although the House passed the bill by more than a two thirds majority which would be sufficient to pass it over the veto. The President's veto message proved a powerful argument and many members who supported the bill on the understanding that it would not cost more than a quarter would now oppose it since they are convinced that it would take about twelve times as much out of the Treasury.

Petitions for the passage of the Pleuro Pneumonia bill continue to pour in to Congress. They come from all portions of the states and Territories. It is estimated that over 40000 citizens and a large number of whom are voters have thus petitioned over their own signatures. Lists for members of the great national agricultural organizations have also been circulated in the country. Among those are the W. C. T. U., the two great national Farmers' Alliances, the Knights of Labor, and many others that have not been heard from. Now that an opportunity is afforded Secretary Matthews and the Department of Agriculture will be able to secure the passage of the bill. Congressmen who have been hitherto indifferent are now in the case, and the President and Secretary Matthews are anxious that the bill should be matured before the adjournment of Congress so that he may be assured of the support of the Department in the matter of the bill. Even in times of national peril the Congressmen who represent the Pleuro Pneumonia districts have been unable to secure the passage of the bill. There are many who are not for any appropriation, and there are many regard to the Dependent Pension bill, although the President has requested Mr. Manning to continue to serve until the 1st. of April.

The members of Congress who have winter are those who belong to the House committee on Appropriations. They are about the best workers in Congress. They sit around a long table covered with blue [illegible] particular member seems bent on stirring up the leaks in the Treasury. Hon. Samuel Randall, who is Chairman in fact as well as in name, sits at the head of the table, and in his rather easy, lounging manner, does at least one-half of the talking. He is just as little impatient, intolerant, and impolite as regards the suggestions of his fellow committemen who differ from him, and he is liked, by them nevertheless.

Next to the Chairman sits Gen. Forney, of Alabama, hugely built but silent. Beside him may be seen the alleged "watch dog of the Treasury", Judge Holman, of Indiana, who objects to every appropriation, however small. He talks as much as the chairman will allow, and enlivens the dull committee room with many little spats at his Chief.

Then there is Mr. Townshend, of Ill. who attacks Mr. Holman's meager allowances, and swarthy Mr. Barnes, of Missouri, who talks wisely when he is induced to speak at all, Messrs Le Fevre, of Ohio, Adams of New York, and Wilson, of W. Va., spend very little time in the committee room, but Mr. Cabell of V., who is economically inclined is always at his post, and and takes a prominent part in the deliberations.

The Republicans have five of their [illegible] on this committee. [illegible] Butterworth, of Ohio, [illegible] of Illinois, Ryan of Kansas, [illegible] of Mass., Henderson, of Iowa, and McComas, of Maryland. Mr. Cannon is their leader, and is a good match for Mr. Randall on all questions of finance that arise. Gen. Henderson is called the one legged soldier because he is the most liberal man on the committee as to any item that concerns soldiers.

Mr. Long, besides being an excellent worker, is distinguished for his elegant manners. Mr. McComas is young and handsome as well as a man of weight, and has a bright future, apparently. He is probably listened to with more attention than any young man in Congress. Mr. Ryan talks little but works a great deal in committee, and Rep. Butterworth, as his friends familiarly call him, has less to say at committee meeting than might be expected of a member who shows to the advantage on the floor of the House.

CERTAINLY THE BEST.

Papillon Clark's extract of flax Catarrh Cure, from an experiment has grown to be the acknowledged superior of any remedy for similar purposes. Purely vegetable and scientifically prepared, it is absolutely harmless, and effects cures where all other medical talent fail. That it is a favorite with all classes is evidenced by the fact that during the past two years, 86,000 gallons have been sold. Positively cures Catarrh, Hay Fever, Colds, etc. Large bottles $1,00.

The Adrian Times says the only man in Michigan who ever won more than $10 on four aces lives in Adrian. This is a bluff and the Times knows it.—Eve. News.

If you have a cough or cold, do not dose yourself with poisons narcotics, but take Red Star Cough Cure, which contains no opiates, and is safe, prompt, and sure. Price, twenty five cents a bottle.

Miss Patton has made several warm friends during her short visit with her brother George Arner, who wish her every success in her elocution efforts and heartily extend a welcome reception at any time in the future she may visit our place.

J. H. Smith of Tecumseh, and the General Agent of Detroit, for the Phoenix Insurance company were in the village Tuesday looking over the ruins of the fire. After a careful investigation, they paid Harry Smith the full amount of insurance of $200 on his house and $42.10 on the household goods, just without a word of disatisfaction.

The attendance at the social held at Mrs. M. A. Barrett's on Friday night was very large, the exercises were good and the refreshments superior to the ordinary run. The society will hold an oyster supper at the house of Mrs. M. M. Florence next week Friday night, and Mrs. Florence cordially invites young and old to come and have a good time.

Harry Smith wishes to thank those who so willingly and readily assisted in saving his household effects on the night his house burned. Dean Lowe was the hero of the scene, as he stood in the upper story until the flames burst through before he left.

Irving Bush left for his home at Brooklyn, N. Y., Tuesday to accompany his parents to Florida to spend a few weeks rusticating and feasting on oranges.

Mrs. Wm. Kelley of Holloway called on friends Wednesday morning before taking the train for Hancock where she will spend some time with friends.

Mrs. B. B. Morley has her household goods all packed to move to Pratt, Kansas, and as soon as Mort says come she will go, you bet.

Waring Bros. & Co., have fitted up a very pleasant place in the front of their store, with an upholstered seat and carpet on the floor for the accommodation of ladies while examining their fine stock of shoes. We are informed that Mrs. G. P. Waring will be found in the store most of the time and will give the general supervision of the ladies shoe department. We extend our congratulations to Mrs. Waring and wish her success.

C. L. Lowe went to Detroit Tuesday, as a delegate to attend the Democratic State convention.

There was a very large audience at the W. C. T. U. on Tuesday night held at the home of Mrs. A. Lawton. The union will meet next Tuesday night at the home of Mrs. S. P. Smith. The question for discussion for the evening, "Does Prohibition Prohibit." It is hoped that there will be a good attendance for the ladies of the union are doing all they can to make these meetings not only an enjoyable occasion but instructive and interesting.

The attendance at the entertainment given Monday evening by Miss Jessie Patton, assisted by Mrs. Hope [illegible] was not as large as the week before, owing to the [illegible] time it was advertised and the stormy night. Everything was as serene nevertheless and we only hear words of praise from those in attendance. Miss Patton's selections were extra good and rendered without defect. The Plot story, The Jewess Curse and Old Time Religion, were grand and brought forth a hearty applause from the audience after which she gave the creed of the "Bells and Shadows." The musical part of the program was unusually good.

MACON MUSIC.

The wind blew very hard last Saturday and Sunday, but no damage was done.

Last Friday evening an Amendment Club was organized at the M. E. church. The following officers were elected:

Ex. Com.—Isaac Hendershot, Mrs. Edwin Howell, Mrs. E. A. Osgood.

Dr. Geo Howell called on friends Sunday.

The surprise party at Frank Mills' Monday evening was well attended.

ONSTED ODDS.

Henry Weeks will soon move to a farm in Rome township.

Samuel Morey visited the Agricultural college at Lansing last week.

H. H. Howes will move to Fairfield in a few weeks.

Orren L. Smith and wife left last Tuesday for their new home near Rives Junction.

The revival meetings at the church are attended by quite a number.

S. Morey, B. Laur and F. H. Kinney went to Homer last week to attend a sale of breeding stock.

Rumor says the Onsted school will open the 27th inst., and that the principal did not know it was a holiday.

Among the cattle recently shipped by Laur & Daniels were some good Durhams raised by Benj. Lock. One 4 yr old bull weighing nine pounds, two 2 yr old steers weighing [illegible] each, and a 4 yr. old cow weighing [illegible] pounds.

HOLLOWAY HAPPENINGS

A non partisan meeting of those in favor of the Prohibitory Amendment in Raisin township, was held at the Town House in Raisin, Thursday evening, the 24th of Feb., for consultation and counsel. Rev. L. M. Beeler was made chairman of the meeting, and committees in two weeks named for every school district, whose business is to make a thorough canvass of their districts, to make arrangements for holding meetings, to do whatever is necessary to help on the work. An executive committee for the whole township was also appointed, consisting of Rev. Levi Chase, Austin Hall and Horace Holbrook, substantially unanimously preferred, and Raisin will not sign a dishonorable majority for the prohibitory. We have no room now to this township. Yet we are willing to believe with Thomas and Adrian Anything business [illegible] will be [illegible] town [illegible] when the [illegible] expected to [illegible].

Rev. T. G. Potter of Tecumseh gave an interesting address (temperance subject) in the M. E. church Monday evening, the 28th inst.

Rev. H. R. Wallinger of Canton gave a very interesting address upon this subject at the Congregational church Monday evening, the 28th inst.

A large number of friends gathered at the M. E. Parsonage Tipton Wednesday eve. Feb. 23d, bringing with them pantry tidbits and a magnificent supper. After a very enjoyable evening, and just before the wee small hours they departed, leaving behind a purse of $15.00 for the pastor, besides various and sundry articles of provisions for house and farm.

Lent began Wednesday, but we want it distinctly understood that neither our exchanges nor our silk umbrella are to be borrowed. Hudson Gazette.

TECUMSEH AND FANKLIN FARMERS' CLUB

A [illegible] stormy night there was a good [illegible] at Mr. James Lathrop's Feb. 26th. The literary program was good and lasted late in evening.

As the ladies of the club had sent a good [illegible] at the last meeting talking strong [illegible] to these hard times, it was thought best for the gentlemen to consider their work a little and try if they could not find some place where they could help their better halves in the good work of economizing, so the question for the evening was "Farm Economy." Mr. [illegible] Swartz gave his opinion as follows:

If you are going to be a farmer be a good one. Be the chief worker yourself. It is the first that wins esteem and respect. Study, observe, and listen and gather information pertaining to your business from every source, and you can soon know as much as any one. Let no day pass without some increase of knowledge. Whatever you cultivate do it well. Whatever stock you have let it be good, and take care of it and improve it as fast as your means will allow. A man working 100 or 150 acres should hire one hand seven or eight months in the year. Now in order to do this and make it a success he will have to take one end of the rope and the remaining four or five months he should do his chores alone. I don't think it pays to keep a man to board for board. I think I can save his board twice. In the first place I won't have him to board, then I can save my board in feeding my stock. You should have a place to keep your stock out of the storm, as it will take less feed to keep them in condition. You should have a place to keep your farming tools in the dry. It costs at least a change to the amount of money spent in purchasing tools, not counting the extra labor. I we pay cash for what we buy we shall get only what we do need. We can buy for cash at a great deal less than we can if we run on a credit, what is the cost of a dollar on credit. I have seen men have an credit with times but the money in their pockets to pay with. Men will form such habits and make the calculations to pay until they get an invitation. I see no reason why we should not pay cash for what we buy, every thing we have to sell we get cash for.

Smith Munger. I agree with the paper. We should economize every way we can, especially those that are in debt. Those that are out of debt need not be as careful. We should [illegible] we can ourself, as it will be [illegible] economical. I see, especially [illegible] I have found it pay to sell, sell it rather than try to carry it along for better prices. The man that sells as soon as the crop is ready, is the one that gains the most by it.

W. S. Osborn. I think we can economize in feeding and that it pays to do it ourselves as it gives us a chance to see that the stock eats up all that is given them and when to change the feed so that each one will do the best.

H. Hogg. I think that if we grow our farming tools a part of paint, as well as to the house, then it would be good economy. And I think it pays to arrange our work so that we can do the most of it ourselves.

H. Wilson. One thing that I think is true economy is a large woodpile sheltered from the rain and located convenient to the kitchen door. And it is also economy to have plenty of good tools to do the work of the farm. Borrowing is poor economy. We should provide everything required for a good farming, and that is proof to raise on the farm.

O. P. Remington. Complained by asking the question, "does it pay to raise wheat by raising it to such an extent that we have to import two million more bushels to feed our farms that might be produced at home?" He clearly proved that it does not pay, and stated that it has been said that anything that is raised at home can be produced at less cost than it can be purchased at the stores at any time.

It was agreed that the next meeting be held the next meeting March 26th at the residence of M. [illegible] Crook. The following program is to be given:

Music. Nellie Crook.
Recitation. Jennie Osborn.
Select Reading. Mrs. Chas. Van [illegible]

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSONS.

Lesson for March 6.

[illegible]

"After these things." Full twenty five years. "Said unto Abraham." Whether in vision or dream is not clear. Apparently it was in the night, for we are told he arose early in the morning after it. Evidently Abraham entertained no doubt the command came from God. "Even Isaac." The description is reiterated as "thy son, thine only son, whom thou lovest, even Isaac," to show the greatness of the sacrifice. "The land of Moriah."—This word occurs only in one other passage in the Old Testament, and is evidently the eastern summit of Jerusalem, where the temple was afterward built. "Offer him there for a burnt offering." There is no question in the story of Abraham's being mistaken in understanding it as to the command. Evidently it was not in Abraham's own day such a command was not to be expected. The age was familiar with human sacrifices, although afterward God forbade them. The drift of the story is to discountenance such sacrifices, even when one was here commanded, for God does not allow it to be consummated. We must keep the different religious development in mind. Now Abraham were to have a vision, he would be more apt to think he should know it came from God, or if doubtful, should be satisfied.

"Saddled his ass." This was perhaps [illegible] and the [illegible] On the third day." It should be about that time to go from Beersheba to Jerusalem.—"We will worship and come again." "Worship" in sacrifice was generally on a high hill. Abraham did not expect his son to come again.—"He took in his hand the fire." Fire was jealously kept from going out, but might be replaced, if lost, by revolving a stick with a bowstring in under.

"Built the altar."—Of stones.

"The will of the Lord." Here the word Jehovah Lord is used instead of God, as is usual in the story. "I know that thou fearest God."—God proved tested not "tempted." Abraham and proved that he would be an obedient and doing as those who worshiped cruel, false gods. "Jehovah-jireh."—Which means, Jehovah will see, or provide. "As it is said." Apparently what is quoted, "In the mount of the Lord it shall be seen" or "provided," was a popular proverb explained by this occurrence.

Instruction. The first question one is likely to ask is how God could ask Abraham to do such a wicked thing as to kill his own son, and how Abraham could proceed to do it. If the teacher remember that many things are right and wrong relative to the enlightenment of the age in which people live. A man may in one age keep slaves, and no one suspect that there is any sin in it. To such a person there is no sin in it. One of the things that people are very slow in learning is the right which each man has in himself so that he cannot be held as a slave, or that as the son of a father he has any rights apart from his father. According to the notions of all ancient times a father has the ownership and right of life and death in his children. They are his property. So even now many people in trade conditions believe they have a right to beat their wives without interference. A Christian lived in Rome could not. It was nothing shocking to God to ask he should offer this sacrifice and reward it. His son was as much as his sheep, only loved more, owned, and the more he was loved the more might be the duty of offering him to God if God asked for him.

Lessons to be learned that here God tells the story not for the sake of the wrong of human sacrifice, but does it as a test. He gives to all a lesson that the blood of [illegible] the place of that [illegible] [illegible] and Abraham [illegible]

Steam, as compared with water, occupies 1,728 times as much space. A cubic inch of water will make 1,728 cubic inches of steam at atmospheric pressure. Now, [illegible] space it occupies at atmospheric pressure, it will be double that pressure or fifteen pounds above the atmosphere, it will then occupy only 864 cubic inches. If reduced again to half its volume, it will occupy 432 cubic inches and will have [illegible] pounds pressure. Reduced again to half the volume, the steam will occupy 216 cubic inches and will have sixty pounds pressure to the square inch. Beg on of the Danube.

The scenery becomes pleasing two or three hours before reaching Buda Pesth. The improvement in the towns and the signs of superior cultivation indicate the nearness of an important metropolis. The river banks are steeper, the hills higher, and great well kept vineyards spread out over the slopes indicating a national industry. Forests or even groves are not frequent. Trees never disappear so rapidly as in the presence of armies. When the Union army arrived at Chattanooga there were groves and forests everywhere. When they left it there was hardly a tree in sight. All of the region of the Danube has been fought over for centuries, so no one can wonder at the universal deforestation.—Cor. San Francisco Chronicle.

At this too familiar proximity, she stood up, and leaned a little stiffly against the line causing the guide to give an extra pull, which had the lamentable effect of landing her almost in his arms. AGRICULTURE.

A Paper Read at the Late Farmer's Institute in Tecumseh by Mr Alex. Richard, of Raisin.

The origin of Agriculture or the art of cultivating the soil dates back very early in the history of the world. Our worthy progenitor, Adam, was at first placed in easy circumstances, located in the midst of surroundings that enabled him to live in luxury without any great effort on his part. The garden in which he was placed by his Creator, brought forth good and wholesome fruit in abundance and he needed only to put forth his [illegible] of the spontaneous products of the trees which the Lord God made to grow out of the ground, eat and live without labor or care, always sure that the wants of to-morrow would be well supplied, even as to-day. That evil disposed individual who always finds some mischief for idle hands to do, soon sought out Adam and his worthy companion, Eve, and with a smooth tongue, from which flowed cunning words of deceit, he pursuaded them to commit an act which brought upon them expulsion from the beautiful garden, their first home of ease and luxury, and placed them under the necessity of working for a living. The country in which they found themselves being new and its resources undeveloped there remained for them no alternative only to engage in agricultural pursuits, for the Lord God had sent him forth from the garden of Eden to till the ground. Ever since that time some part of the human race have followed the occupation of their first ancestors, and although the ground, on account of the curse pronounced upon it for man's sake, has always brought forth thorns and thistles, it is true that honest labor has subdued in a measure the troublesome growth of weeds and briars, and the ground has always brought forth its increase so that man and beast have never failed of a supply of food in all the ages since the beginning. Seed time has never failed since the time when the promise was made to Noah, neither has the harvest failed to follow the seed time. The ground from which man himself was taken has ever produced "seed to the sower and bread to the eater." We call the laws which govern the process of bringing forth the hidden treasures of the soil nature's laws and nature's laws are God's laws. Many things in the working of nature are beyond our comprehension. We cannot understand the process of growth in vegetable life. When we cast seed into the ground we know that in it there is life and that it will put forth "first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear." We cannot tell just how the soil [illegible] the properties necessary to make the fruit, but we know, that under certain conditions the result of sowing the seed will be the harvest.

Labor—unremittent and hard labor is necessary to prepare the soil for the seed, and the young and tender plants must be cultivated and nourished through all the various stages of their growth and development. Continued war must be waged against the "thorns and thistles," or they will choke out the plants that we wish to have grow to maturity. There is no end to work on the farm. Everything must be done in the right time, in the proper season, and it is truly said "wind and tide wait for no man." It is not less true that the seasons delay not in their coming and going. The successful farmer cannot be an idler. There is always something to do, something that must be done in order that he may secure satisfactory results from his labor.

An indolent man is not worth much in any sphere in life but on a farm if dependent on his own exertions, he will starve. The practice of putting off work until to-morrow that ought to be done to-day brings poverty and want. Seed must be sown in the right time and the right time is the seed time. Hay must be made when the sun shines, and in the harvest the fruit of our labor must be gathered in. One thing follows another in quick succession, and there is always danger that he who delays will suffer irreparable loss. Not alone is the labor of our hands necessary that we may be successful tillers of the soil. A farmer needs brains and he needs to know how to use them. Muscle is always requisite but its efforts must be guided by brain force. Labor must be directed by thought. Guess work is uncertain and haphazard and only to confusion and disappointments. The whys and wherefores must be sought out, and the latent powers of Mother Earth must be called forth and utilized for one's profit and advantage. That man does not live who has a broader field for study and investigation than the farmer. The book of nature is open before him. The success of his labor depends upon the strict observance of fixed laws which cannot be violated with impunity. Wonderful things there are in the heavens above and in the earth beneath. Great kingdoms teeming with animal and vegetable life, all of which can be controlled by his hand. Numerous forces are at work which may be guided and applied to useful purposes. The farmer has only to look and learn, to study and investigate and he can store his mind with rich treasures of knowledge, which will prove to be a source of profit and an inexhaustable spring of enjoyment.

He who tills the soil need not be simply a plodder for if he combines labor with thought he becomes a farmer, a gentleman, and moves in a sphere which affords ample scope for all the powers, both physical and mental with whose use the Creator has endowed him. It is not true that knowledge acquired at the schools suits a man for manual labor. Education is a life work and we have only made a beginning when we have successfully passed through a course of study in any school or college. A little learning in an empty head makes a great noise, and a compound composed of one part of learning and nine parts of self conceit, is worthless, for it places a man above labor in his own estimation, and below anything else in the estimation of others. The world is full of professional drones, and many a farmer's boy is spoiled by being made to think that he is too smart to work on the farm, and must make his living by his wits in some of the professions. Often times the farmer's boy who shows an aptitude to learn, is sent to college, spends four or five years of his life in the cram ming process, graduates below the average of his class, and above work on the farm and spends the remaining years of his life looking for an easy job, while perhaps the boy who stays at home and uses the education he may have attained at a good graded school, makes THE MAN, simply because he utilizes his stock of learning and applies it to the every day business of life. We must not depreciate the value of a good education, but we need to understand the meaning of the term. Education is a life work and our best schools only give instructions in the rudiments of true culture and the sensible farmer laddie who has graduated with honor at school or college, will not esteem himself above work, either on the farm or in any other sphere in life. Honest labor degraded no man and he who considers scholarly attainments thrown away that are used in the occupation of farming, makes a sad mistake.

We cannot well do without professional men. The minister and the doctor are indispensable. The lawyer is a necessary evil. We need teachers in the various departments of science, literature and art. We need merchants and mechanics, and there is a place and room enough for everybody who seeks to gain a living in an honorable way. All the professions and trades furnish a broad field for the exercise of the highest powers of immortal minds in the development of true manhood.

All classes of society are firmly bound together by ties of interest and mutual dependence, and there should be no effort put forth to pull down one class in order to build up another. Organization becomes a curse to society when used for other purposes than the good of mankind in general; and he who seeks to retard his fellow man in his efforts to acquire either wealth, honor or fame, ill deserves the belt and spurs of knighthood. The farmer is the true knight of labor. In matters pertaining to labor or business he owes allegiance to no man or organization. He is protected in his God given rights by the necessities of humanity, and although it is true that "man does not live by bread alone" he can not well live without it.

There is no station that is free from the cares and perplexities that are incident to human life. The best efforts in any profession sometimes fail. "The best laid schemes o' mice an' men gang aft agley," but as a rule the farmer may, by diligence in business and reasonable economy, secure for himself and his family all the comforts and many of the luxuries of life. And by strict observance of the laws which govern his relations to God and his fellow man he may maintain a manly independence and live above the never ceasing beggarings, and strivings after place, power or wealth, so coveted by most of his portion fail health, contentment and peace.

FARMERS' CLUBS AS EDUCATORS.

Paper Read at the Farmers' Institute at Tecumseh Feb. 11th, by Mrs. F. C. Rector.

We live in an age of progress. Not a slow, sleepy age, but one wide awake, full of steam and electricity, and if we keep pace, we cannot slumber or sit in idleness, but must be awake, with eyes, ears, hands and intellect on the alert. Every class of workmen in the world's great workshop has its organizations for protection or advancement in knowledge in their respective departments. There are trades unions, alliances, conclaves, encampments, conventions and meetings without number, including in their membership citizens of every grade. The President of this proud republic, with his cabinet of counselors from every enlightened nation on the globe, have their meetings; courts and the State legislatures have long sessions for the benefit of the people at large; lawyers, doctors, ministers, photographers and dairymen have their meetings; the undertakers have their conventions to devise new methods of preserving and burying the dead, and so on down to the newsboys and bootblacks, and if I mistake not I read of a rag-pickers' convention; there are also the anarchists and socialists' open and secret meetings. These are all instructors for either good or evil. If all these different professions or trades have their respective organizations, why not the farmers? Farmers may belong to some of these organizations, but as a rule they do not. The great need of some organization to protect and advance farmers in a corresponding ratio to the other professions, led to the organization of the grange. The grange has grown until it is an acknowledged power. The meetings are often held at a place where it is not convenient for many farmers to attend, and, still feeling the comparative isolation of their lives and the need of more sociability and stimulus to intellectual exertion, they began to organize farmers' clubs, which are proving to be good educators, as they educate socially, morally and intellectually.

A few years ago the farmers were contented to sit down evenings with their papers, and read until they were sleepy, then go to bed, perhaps the monotony might be relieved by a visit to a neighbors, or occasionally an evening down town to an entertainment, lecture, political meeting, but there was nothing special to call for a trial of their intellectual power.

A farmers' club is started in a neighborhood, perhaps with few members at first, a programme is arranged, and every one is expected to do his or her part faithfully and to the best of their ability. The first efforts may not be very praiseworthy, but once aroused the progress is steadily forward, and the club proves like a good teacher in our schools. A good teacher will not perform the pupils' work, but point forward and only give hints, which stimulate to further research, until they are eager to unlock with their own energies the mysteries lying beyond.

Many of our farmers thought they had completed their education, but when asked to give their ideas, experiments, or conclusions in regard to farming or other subjects brought to their notice, they were astonished to find they could not. They understood them themselves and supposed that was all that was necessary, but when asked to give them to others, "when a meeting was in order," they were confused and embarrassed; but this as well as other things assigned them they are expected to do, and they soon find the science of any thing is knowledge of the same reduced to order. The clubs are educators, as they teach the members to reduce their knowledge to order and present their ideas in a plain, practical manner. In so doing they find they are only half way up the ladder, and must still climb if they wish to reach the top; but once started they do not purpose to descend but to keep advancing.

A short time ago, when the silver hairs began to be sprinkled upon the head of our worthy president, he thought he was growing old and better sit contented by his fireside, as the weather was too cold or the roads too rough or too muddy to go out; but, like many others, he found the club meeting interesting and instructive as well as very social. Now, ask him if the night is too cold or the roads unfavorable and he replies "No, I want to go and hear that question discussed," or "I want to hear Mr. C's ideas as I am not fully satisfied with my own conclusions." Thus it is with many, give them questions to think about and expect them to give their thoughts to others, they give their attention to the matter and are not satisfied until they can express themselves understandingly and they are anxious to hear and profit by the experience of others.

The State established and maintained institutions of learning for the general diffusion of knowledge, also the University for special instruction in the professions. Then it felt the need of instruction in agriculture, and the result was the establishment of the Agricultural College and Experimental Farm. Farmers' sons can now be educated and combine theory with practice. In addition to the instruction given at the College, the Board of Agriculture inaugurates a series of institutes to be held each winter to disseminate experimental knowledge among the people. The State provides a sum of money (how much I do not know) to meet the expenses of the institutes, and much good is done and interest aroused. The State of Wisconsin provides $5,000 and holds 60 institutes yearly. The board provides lecturers for the institutes, but for the greater part of the material to make them interesting they depend upon local talent. Where there are granges or farmers clubs formed and in working order the institute is much easier sustained, as the members are educated to such work and are ready to respond.

Six years ago last November the Farmers' Social Club was formed and it has steadily progressed. I say progressed, and I think the members will bear me out in my assertion, for I am sure they all know it has been a benefit. In one item it has been a great educator; it has led to habits of thought. Many men and women had never, or since their long ago school days, written a paper or essay, and they looked aghast when appointed by the committee to do so; but we have no such words as "I can't" in our articles of organization, and they find they have intellects that only need arousing to that special work. The young people are taught to think of subjects that hitherto they had no interest in, and they are surprised to find the questions are interesting and they can express their ideas intelligently. As the outgrowth of this organization, other clubs have been formed, until there are now four clubs in the immediate vicinity of Tecumseh.

Let the good work go on, until every farmer is a member of a club; but I would caution against forming them too close together, as it will become like a small village with too many churches. One good, strong, flourishing church is better and will do more good than a number of weakly ones, where they can only pay their ministers starvation wages; and so it is with the clubs. A few, well organized, and strong in numbers, where there are enough so that it is not necessary to call upon any one to perform a part too often, will prove more efficient and exist longer than many small ones.

MACON GRANGE.

Macon Grange met in regular session, Feb 24th, at 2 o'clock P. M., according to call. W. M. in the chair. Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, most of the members were present. The meeting was called to order promptly on time and regular order of business gone through with. After a short recess, the program as announced two weeks ago was taken up and well carried out. The inaugural address by J. W. Baker, setting forth the objects and aims of the Grange had been carefully written and was well read. The essay by Mr. Edwin Howell, was a grand production and to be appreciated should have been heard. It was rich in sentiment and full of pathos. We hope to procure it for publication. The Select Reading by Mrs. Lester Osgood was a timely selection and well read. It was a temperance poem containing a moral lesson well calculated to enlighten and instruct. Last but not least was an instructive reading given by Edwin Howell, which fully sustained the above.

The cream selling vs. butter making question was discussed at some length and proved to be a practical and interesting one, nearly every one taking part in it. Both sides had its friends. The few minutes time allotted to Edwin Howell, contained the spice of the discussion and produced a good deal of merriment. Although some forty minutes time was spent in a lively talk, only enough had been said to show the importance of the question. Time being up, the question was carried over to the next meeting. In concluding this article we would say to the members of Macon Grange that have failed to attend the meetings this year, that they do not know how much they are losing, as no such interest in Grange work has been taken for a long time.

Macon Grange will meet in regular session, Thursday, March 10th, at one o'clock P. M. sharp.

The Ruttan Smead Furnace.

EAST SAGINAW, Feb. 17, '87. A. P. BILLS, Esq. DEAR SIR: We have four large buildings heated and ventilated by the Ruttan Smead System. The Board of Education, the Farmer Superintendent and I are all enthusiastic in its praise. The ventilation afforded is the best I have ever seen in all my experience. It is as nearly perfect as any automatic system, any system not employing fan power and a fan, can be. Our rooms are evenly warmed and ventilated without opening a door or a window from Nov. 1st. to April 1st. By a simple device warm or cold air is admitted at the same register, and the temperature of the room can be changed one degree per minute by it. As to economy: Soft coal is burned in the furnaces with perfect success, and the heat is as great as other hard coal furnaces produce, using ton for ton. As hard coal costs twice as much as soft, the economy of the Smead system is manifest. We have three large buildings in which we use their dry closet system in connection. This works well with them and is much liked. It should be used where sewerage is impossible. If you desire anything further, double figures as to gain in economy, I will be pleased to go through our records and gather them out for you with kind regards. Yours Truly, C. B. THOMAS.

Drs. Starkey and Palens' advertisement of Compound Oxygen in this issue of this paper should be read by all of our readers. The cures which this treatment is effecting are almost miraculous. In the few years since its discovery they have treated in all parts of the world upwards of seventy thousand patients. Over forty thousand of these have given testimonials that they are cured, and a large proportion of the others report great benefit from its use. Their offer to send a two hundred page book free, giving a history of the treatment, with a large number of testimonials, is a liberal one. Read the advertisement and send for the book now.

Ladies who are looking for a Magazine to meet all their requirements should see DEMOREST'S Monthly for March. It has arrived, and, as usual, is full of information and amusement. Nothing seems to be left undone to make "Demorest's" the most popular Family Magazine in the world. There is always something to interest all, from the youngest child to the "head of the house." This number contains a very striking water color picture "The Two Majesties." The serial, "Allan Quartermain," by H. Rider Haggard, author of "She," etc., is a wonderful story of adventure, as are all of this world renowned author's productions. The other stories, articles, and general information on all household matters are too numerous to mention. This Magazine has taken a firm stand on the Prohibition question, which makes it popular in families where there are boys to influence. Nor are the girls forgotten, for the department of "Our Girls" contains useful advice to them. Published by W. Jennings Demorest, 17 East 14th St., New York, at $2.00 per year.

A Word of Warning

Young men of Tecumseh, you were not called to enter the ranks in the years 61 to 65, because you had not reached your majority and that excepted you, you would have donned the blue and obeyed your country's call, with the alacrity which inspired every loyal man, and would have left a record honorable alike to your name, to your country and to your race. The war cry of to-day may not be so imploring as that other war cry, when Lincoln's voice was as a clarion all over the land. But still it is a war cry, including an emancipation proclamation, including not only the redemption of millions from slavery, but 50 millions from disgrace and ruin. For our whole country is the theater of its cruel ravages and butchery. A golden opportunity is before you, and we beseech you in the name of your mothers, your sisters, your affianced, do not reject it. "The Amendment" is to be put to public vote, and we implore you, if you have never said yes before, to say yes on election day, that the great boasting iniquity in the advocacy of king alcohol, may stop her mouth. It is indispensable that this clamor for unrighteous gain should be silenced, and men made to feel as never before, that Bacchus is not God, that whiskey is not supreme, that all men are not demented: that common sense and common honesty are in existence still. Young men of Tecumseh, be our vanguard. We will cheerfully follow your leading.

AN OLD SOLDIER.

The Superintendent of Public Instruction has appointed Rev. C. S. Lester, of '80, Hon. J. K. Boies, of Hudson, and Prof. Haynes, of Hillsdale, as a committee to visit the Seminary the coming year. We hope the gentlemen will discharge their duty better than their predecessors have done, for we have never as yet known a member of this committee to visit the school.—Seminary Mirror.

About midnight Wednesday, John Britton, one of our most respected citizens, met with a terrible though not fatal accident. Mr. Britton went to Detroit Wednesday and returned on the fast train going through Britton at about 12 o'clock. When the train was several rods below the crossing and yet moving quite rapidly he attempted to get off and was thrown violently mangling his face to a horrible manner, besides injuring his right shoulder. The train was stopped and the employees conveyed him unconscious to his home near by. He is under the care of Dr. Nelson, who was immediately summoned. It is hoped the injuries are not as serious as at first supposed.—Britton Eagle.

BIRTHDAY SOCIAL.

On the well remembered natal day of February 25th, a company of forty-five assembled at the pleasant and spacious farm-house of Francis A. Dewey in Cambridge. There in social friendship were neighbors, friends and relatives, to congratulate with the pioneer farmer on his seventy-sixth birthday, and over fifty seven years residence in Lenawee County. At two o'clock P. M. the long dining room was beautifully and in artistic order decorated with mottoes, flags, banners and paintings: also the tables were profusely and elegantly spread, with the generous products from the fertile garden beds of Michigan, with a large variety of the culinary art, to please the taste of all, not omitting the admired fruit from the southern temperate groves. Also the admixture of oysters from the Ocean. Here was a feast of genuine good will without a perceptable cloud to dim the horizon at the cherished loved genial home. At evening there was an entertainment with the seven sons and one daughter. As annually for thirty years past a few small presents were given. Thus the cheerful grand children received twenty-five silver dollars, with many pleasant greetings. Also the generous and kindly hand of the aged father and mother gave to the sons and daughter on this memorable evening as a gift of remembrance, three thousand dollars. Thus passed side seventy sixth birthday of one of the pioneers of Cambridge.

Since moving into my new quarters, I have added largely to my stock of caskets, robes and funeral furnishings, and have the best facilities ever enjoyed by any dealer in Tecumseh, in the undertaking business. I have a night bell attached to my office, and all night calls will be promptly answered. My prices too are made to suit the times. L. S. KANNEY.

FARMER'S UNION CLUB.

Friday evening, Feb. 25, the Farmer's Union Club met at F. Davidson's. The interest of the people was shown by the large number present. With one exception the program was presented as written, and with credit to the participants.

W. S. Comfort being absent, the question was opened by S. Benedict, who thought the benefits of farmers' clubs were many, and the social part worth all the trouble and cost of time; also, that knowledge and thought were collected by interchange of [illegible] He considered the education of the young people and children, one of the grandest results of farmer's clubs. F. H. Hall thought the literary culture attained by attending farmer's clubs, was a great help to a person. Work in such a club is not to be considered a task like school duties, but a pleasure and benefit to all, for while we help others we are helping ourselves. People get better acquainted with neighbors and intercourse with them broadens their views of human nature.

Several members of the club made remarks on the subject and all decided that farmer's clubs were a benefit to farmers socially and educationally. Mr. Williams spoke of the necessity of farmers having some means of protection. "Every industry has some way of protecting itself, but the farmer stands alone and must trust some one else."

The Club will meet at H. J. Williams' Friday evening, March 11th.

OBITUARY.

Daniel G. Ludlum was born at Romulus, Seneca Co., New York, on the 20th day of December 1799. He moved to Adrian, Michigan in 1836 and from thence to Tecumseh, where he has since resided. In 1847 his wife passed on to the better land, and after this bereavement he took up his abode with his daughter, Mrs. E. Anderson, with whom he has found a pleasant home for the past forty years. He died on the 7th day of February last, after an illness of three weeks duration. "Uncle Dan" as he was familiarly known, has gone from among us. He was a quiet, unobtrusive citizen, a kind father and a faithful friend. The little circle in which he lived and moved will sadly miss his pleasant smile and kindly ways. He enjoyed his modest home here on earth and had been blessed with life and health beyond the allotted time. In the fullness of his years he has been gathered to his fathers. May our last end be like his.

Mrs. Tamer Humphrey was born in Ontenego county, N. Y., Oct. 1807 and died in Tecumseh, Mich., Sunday afternoon, Feb. 27, 1887, being 80 years, 4 months and 14 days old. For some time she was failing, little by little, day by day nearing the mansions above. In all so trusting, patient and given to prayer. Loving hands were ever near in her sickness, to attend her in faithfulness and love, being those of her own son, E. W. Humphrey and his wife and daughter. She went as she had lived, a Christian, and thus the going did not affright, for love and heaven and Jesus was her solace, trust and victory. She was a member of the Baptist church of Church's corners, Wheatland, Mich. On Tuesday morning, March 1st, after a brief service at the house of her son, her remains, accompanied by friends, were conveyed to Wheatland for funeral services and burial.

WOMAN'S SPHERE.

They talk about a woman's sphere,
As though it had a limit;

There's not a life, or death, or birth,
That has a feather's weight of worth,
Without a woman in it.

THAT BUNDLE.

Alden seven years ago my sister Mrs. Bowen was spending in Paris for a season, and she had some friends there who made Paris their home. These friends, Mr. and Mrs. Haven, I knew very well, and my mother knew them quite well, and among other visits they made them a central point in the town where we lived.

It happened so that the day after their arrival they were out and left town without returning my call, as they were there but a day or two, and without seeing me or any of my family. I thought sorry to have missed them.

A month went by, and one evening, just at twilight, one of the ladies of the family whom they had visited—whom I will call Smith for the sake of convenience—came in to see me and said—

"Oh, I only ran in for a minute. I've been trying to come for a month to ask you why you never acknowledged the receipt of that bundle Mr. Haven brought over to you from Mrs. Bowen?"

"What bundle?" I said. "I never had any bundles. I never knew that Mrs. Bowen sent me any bundle."

"Why, you must have it; you must forget. Mr. Haven sent it to you by the Adams Express from New York as soon as he landed, and he has thought it very strange that you never acknowledged it. And he has got so vexed about it, and thought it so rude of you not to thank him for bringing it to you that he wouldn't ask about it until now, just as he is going home, and he wants to tell Mrs. Bowen you received it."

"I am awfully sorry," I said; "but you know I couldn't very well write about a bundle I never received and didn't know had been sent."

"What was in the bundle?"

My curiosity was very great, and I listened eagerly for her answer. Visions of all sorts of beautiful things flashed through my head—laces, handkerchiefs, stockings, perhaps even a dress. Could it be a ravishing bonnet? I was all ears and all expectation.

Miss Haven said she didn't know what was in the bundle, but she said it felt like silks or satins. It wasn't a large bundle.

"Well," I said, "now where under the sun is that bundle?"

"It might possibly have come to father's," my husband remarked.

He had dropped his usually all absorbing evening paper and was listening to us.

"Your father's?" I nearly shrieked. "Dear me! if there is anything absolutely detestable it is to live in a small town and be the duplicate in name of your mother-in-law with junior attached, which all your friends forget and all your enemies never. Our dinners have gone to your father's, and they have eaten them. They have stolen our cherished small purchases of early Bermuda tomatoes for salads, read my letters, been horrified by my bills, kept my dresses and bonnets a week or so until they found they were mine, and now they have got my bundle. I wish—and here I rose from my chair to give emphasis to my words—yes, I do wish you had been named Nebuchadnezzar anything but what you are named."

"Yes," said my husband, "it is annoying certainly, but you know even my mother would hardly have kept a bundle three months. On the whole, it couldn't have gone there."

I felt stern reproof in my husband's voice, and I took refuge in remarking sharply—

"Well, what did you suggest it for?"

"If you will wait, Mrs. Smith," said my husband, rising, "I will walk up to father's and just find out positively if the bundle went there or not. If it didn't, we must inquire at the express office. Of course it will turn up."

So he went off, and we sat and talked until he came back, but when he did come it was only to say—

"They don't know anything about any bundle."

We exclaimed, and wondered, and surmised for a little while, and then my husband went down town and inquired at the express office. After he went Mrs. Smith explained to me that Mr. Haven, in his frequent trips across the Atlantic had been so bothered by frequent applications from friends to take over to America various bundles—sometimes of dutiable goods, which he was expected to smuggle, that he had for years made it a point to say "No" to all such requests from everybody, no matter from whom they might come; but that my sister, not being aware of this fact, had asked him to take the small bundle for me, and that he had gladly done so. Miss Haven had described the bundle to Mrs. Smith. It was about ten inches long by five wide, and was done up in gray wrapping paper and was fully addressed to me—state, city, street and number. Miss Haven remembered the bundle vividly, because when Mrs. Bowen had sent word that it was a small bundle, she judged that it might perhaps fill up a quarter of a trunk of ordinary size, and so had packed some of her trunks with reference to it, and was delightfully surprised when she found that from her point of view it really was a small bundle. It was the only bundle they brought over not their own. They had brought over two or three gifts for friends, and all had been sent away at the same time from the Hotel Brunswick in New York.

Here seemed a clew that I eagerly caught.

"It must have gone as a gift to one of those friends who just acknowledged receiving their beautiful present, etc., and didn't specify what article had been received," I said.

"But," said Mrs. Smith, "the bundle was addressed to you. They never changed it at all, but just sent it off."

"Well," I said, "then the express company has mislaid it or lost it, but it would be a great comfort to me to know what was in that bundle."

"Write to your sister and find out," said Mrs. Smith.

Brilliant idea! I sat down to my desk and wrote two letters, one to my sister in Paris, saying that I had just learned that she had sent me a bundle by Mr. Haven, and that it had never reached me. As I wrote it occurred to me that she had intended the gift as a surprise, and that was the reason I had not known of it. All this I wrote, and begged her to answer me at once. This was Monday night, and I was going to New York the next day. Mr. Haven was to sail for Havre on the next day but one. I wrote a note to Mr. Haven, who was to return alone, stating the facts about the bundle, that I deeply regretted to know that he had thought me remiss in acknowledging his kindness, etc., and I added that the next day I was going to New York and would be at the Brevoort house, and that if he had time I would be glad to see him there before he sailed.

My husband came home, and said the express office was shut up, and that ended that question.

The next day when I reached the Brevoort I found a note from Mr. Haven saying that I answered for the note then seemed to be of no consequence, and so I can give the substance only. It said that Mr. Haven was very sorry to learn from a letter that he had just received from his friend, as he understood that I had never received the bundle that he had been sent to me, and that he himself had taken the package to the express. He also stated that the clerk to whom he had given the package had left the house, but the man in charge had assured him that no package of any kind was ever sent by them to any express company without a receipt being taken, and that he would look it up. Mr. Haven, about that, he regretted that some important business matters prevented his either looking up the matter himself, or calling to see me at the Brevoort house, as he was to sail early the next day. He advised me, as I was then on the spot, to go to the headquarters of the Adams Express company in New York and state the case, and as I already had an accurate description of the bundle it would certainly be found in a short time. And that was the sum and substance of it.

The next afternoon I was going down to Staten Island to a reception, and as I had but two or three days in town, and was extremely busy, and knew that it would be so far down town unless I went on purpose, I took a carriage to the ferry, and on the way down stopped at the Adams Express company.

I stated to the first man who stood near the door my errand, which seemed to belong to the place, and I had come to find a missing bundle, and asked of whom I should inquire. He raised his hat to me with a quite unusual gesture and said—

"You have a perfect right to the office."

I felt as if I had a right to look so, and I would have felt perfectly at home and at ease, so far as distance from Vicksburg was concerned, but that—and it came quite fresh to me—I was a woman, and I was in a place where there were men, plenty of them, and they looked astonished, but he was very polite. I said I came to inquire about a missing bundle, and began my story. He said to the middle of my first sentence—

"Will you kindly come this way to the office?"

So I followed him.

When I first entered the doors I couldn't see a man, but suddenly they seemed to grow up everywhere. Every large box seemed to have a head behind it, and they all had eyes, and they were all looking at me. I felt very awkward and out of place, and for the time being I wish I never had been born.

At last we reached a small glass inclosed space, when my guide opened a new kind of a door and said, "A lady about a lost bundle." And I found myself standing before a man that terrified me so—and I am not a timid woman—that I haven't an idea what he looked like, except that he seemed inoffensive in every way. He offered me a chair, and I sat down and tried to make myself believe that this man was not really the whole Adams Express company, for this was the reason he seemed so terrifying. After a while I was able to tell him pretty clearly about my lost bundle.

I accurately described its appearance and size, and all I knew about it, and also all I did not know about its contents. He listened very politely, and then he gave me a blow that seemed to be entirely out of rule. He said—

"Have you inquired for it at the office of the Hotel Brunswick?"

"N-o-o," I said doubtfully, "but I suppose Mr. Haven did."

"Ah, yes," he said. "Well, have you been to the Twenty-third street office? It would naturally have gone there."

"No," I said, "I haven't inquired anywhere but here. Mr. Haven told me to come here."

"Well"—

"He didn't say much more, neither did I. He took my name and address, and then he opened the door for me, and said he would do all in his power to have the bundle found, and that I should hear from him. And as I walked out it didn't seem to me that I had done much about finding my bundle by inquiring at headquarters."

The next day I went to the Hotel Brunswick, and a clerk came up into the parlor and saw me.

By that time I was rather tired of telling my story, and so I went over it as rapidly as possible. The clerk listened as politely as the august representative of the express company had done, and when I had finished he assured me that the matter should at once be attended to, and that the bundle would certainly be found in the near future. I was very much impressed by that phrase, as he probably meant I should be. He said—

"It stands to reason that it must be found. We never send away a bundle without taking a receipt."

Satisfied he politely ended, and I got myself out on the sidewalk, and felt at first pretty sure of my bundle, but on second thought I felt somewhat doubtful. They all assured me it would be found, and yet—well, I began to feel very doubtful.

The next day I went home. I waited a month for an answer to my letter to my sister. But when I did receive a letter from her it was not an answer to mine, which had evidently not reached her, as she only spoke of the receipt of a letter of a date some two weeks previous.

To make a long story short, I may say that I never got an answer to my letter to my sister. She was traveling about, and her letters were short, and only full of daily experiences. But it seemed exceedingly strange to me that she made no allusion at all to the letter about the bundle. In each of my letters to her I spoke of my letter and asked her to tell me about it, what was in it? was she sure of her address? etc.

Finally, feeling sure that that particular and most important letter had been lost, I wrote a duplicate of it as nearly as I could, and sent it off. In the meantime I had received two letters—one from the Adams Express company in which they said that they could find no trace of the lost bundle, and also that no receipt could be found for it either in their books or in the Hotel Brunswick.

I received also a letter from the Hotel Brunswick.

It was of the same tenor—they had no record, they regretted extremely the loss and annoyance to me and to Mr. Haven. They stated explicitly that no suspicion could be attached to the clerk who had left them, and regretted that they were unable to give me his address.

The bundle was no longer "missing." It was—

I felt resigned. I consoled myself. I even became glad. I reflected that if it had been stockings of a rare and peculiar quality—and certainly my sister, knowing my fas— common silk stockings—that they might have been the cause of producing all s— of disasters.

For instance, if they had bee— stockings of uncommon beauty, I— ld have no shoes to match. I mi— have— or if not to match, to do tolerably. And good gracious! there would have been a pretty bill to pay. Then my dress would have had to be of a "simple elegance." We all know what that means. "Simple elegance" is the most expensive kind of— thing on the market. To dress in sim— elegance, not as a rule, ordinary purse would have been impossible. To make— evening party, and fit my clothes would have been financial ruin to my husband, and moral ruin to my boys.

But I did want to know what was in the bundle, and I did want it found, because it might have been something else that was nice, and suppose it was—

Five months were away, and it was six months since I had first heard of my bundle. It was December, and my sister was coming home, and all that time had passed without having heard a word about the bundle. I went to New York to meet Mrs. Bowen, but I had a dreadful cold on my lungs and could scarcely speak, and as I was visiting far up street I did not go to the dock to meet her, but waited till she reached the hotel, and I walked into the Brevoort house half an hour after she reached there. After five minutes of saying, "How do you do?" "Are you awfully tired?" "Did you have a rough time?" "Too bad you were sick!" There never is anything else to say when your dearest friends have been gone a few years—at least, not at first, I said.

"For pity's sake, do tell me what was in that bundle you sent me!"

My sister was reading one of the heap of letters that had been handed her just as I entered the room. After a few seconds she raised her eyes and dropped the letter.

"Oh, yes," she said, "I am glad you thought of that. I've been wondering what in the world you meant in all your letters by forever asking me about a bundle. Do tell me about it. I kept writing and writing you about it, and you never answered. Why didn't you?"

"Yes," said my sister, "your letters been so mysterious ever since about a bundle. Now, will you tell me what you meant by—"

I began to open my mouth, when she said—

"You see I couldn't make head or tail of it, and writing mixes things up so, I thought I would wait until I saw you."

"Well, what was in it?" I said.

"In what?"

She looked extremely puzzled.

"In what?" I almost shrieked. "I would have shrieked if I could have, but my cold was so bad that I could just speak above a whisper. "Why, the bundle, of course."

"What bundle?" And she really did speak very loud. "What bundle? I don't know what on earth you mean."

"The bundle you sent me by Mr. Haven. What other bundle can I mean?"

"The bundle I sent you by Mr. Haven? I never sent you any bundle by Mr. Haven!"

I fell back in my chair and gasped. I couldn't speak for a moment, and then I repeated:

"Never sent me any bundle by Mr. Haven?"

"Never! What an idea! What made you think I did?"

When I could collect my senses and my breath, I told her the story from beginning to end, and then she was as astonished and mystified as we all had been. She solemnly declared that she never had sent me any bundle by any one, and that if she had ever sent me a present, it wasn't at all likely she would have forgotten it.

And that was perfectly true. She could not have forgotten it if she had sent me a gift, and then on the other hand, there was Mr. Haven and his positive assertion, and hurt feelings, etc.

From that day to this it has remained an absolute mystery. The word of Mrs. Bowen is not to be disputed; neither is the word of Mr. Haven.

There have been a great many explanations of this affair of the bundle, and many questions asked. This is a specimen:

"Why didn't you go to the Twenty-third street office, if would naturally have gone there from the Brunswick?"

"But it was never sent."

"Oh! yes, to be sure."

My sister still says she never sent a bundle, but Mr. Haven said the last time I knew of his speaking of it—

"I took a bundle just as I said I did."

If this is so, what did become of "The Bundle?"—Katharine B. Foot in Cosmopolitan.

Federal Entry into Vicksburg.

I was standing in front of our headquarters when the Federal army made their grand entry into Vicksburg. They were a good way off when we first heard their drums as they sounded the tum tum, and every ear was turned to the quarter from whence this came to make out what they were playing. Various guesses were offered in this direction, but were all given up, one by one, as the wind lulled or shifted and the sounds got so terribly mixed up that not the most perfect master of music could say for a certainty that they expressed any tune at all. At last somebody exclaimed: "Why, that is Yankee Doodle." As the Federal column came into view every drummer and fifer in the whole grand army played "Yankee Doodle" as loud and as strong as it was possible for them to make it.—W. C. Wilde in Philadelphia Times.

Gen. Boulanger's Boyhood.

Gen. Boulanger was the son of a poor advocate at Nantes and a beautiful Englishwoman, and in his boyhood was as vain and theatrical as now. He would often go without his lunch in order to save money for the purchase of lemon colored kid gloves.—Chicago Times.

Open to an Engagement.

An advertisement reads as follows: "A young man, sober and reliable, who has a wooden leg and cork arm, is willing, for a moderate salary, to allow his false limbs to be mauled by wild beasts in any reputable menagerie as an advertisement. No objection to traveling."

Soil of the Nile.

The soil of the Nile delta has proven to be thicker than was supposed, borings by royal engineers having failed to reach a solid bottom at a depth of 200 feet.—Arkansaw Traveler.

The First Sign

Of failing health, whether in the form of Night Sweats and Nervousness, or simply a cause of General Weariness and Loss of Appetite, should suggest the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This preparation is most effective for giving tone and strength to the enfeebled system, promoting the digestion and assimilation of food, restoring the nervous forces to their normal condition, and for purifying, enriching, and vitalizing the blood.

Failing Health.

Ten years ago my health began to fail. I was troubled with a distressing Cough, Night Sweats, and Nervousness. I tried various remedies prescribed by different physicians, but became so weak that I could not go up stairs without stopping to rest. My friends recommended me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I did, and I am now as healthy and strong as ever.—Mrs. E. L. Williams, Alexandria, Minn.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla in my family, for scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, that it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease. I have also prescribed it as a tonic, as well as an alterative, and must say that I honestly believe it to be the best blood medicine ever compounded.—W. F. Fowler, M. D., D. D. S., Greenville, Tenn.

Dyspepsia Cured.

It would be impossible for me to describe what I suffered from Indigestion and Headache up to the time I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was under the care of various physicians, and tried a great many kinds of medicines, but never obtained more than temporary relief. After taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for a short time, my headache disappeared, and my stomach performed its duties more perfectly. To-day my health is completely restored.—Mary Harley, Springfield, Mass.

I have been greatly benefited by the prompt use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It tones and invigorates the system, regulates the action of the digestive and assimilative organs, and vitalizes the blood. It is, without doubt, the most reliable blood purifier yet discovered.—H. D. Johnson, 885 Atlantic avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The breath of a chronic catarrh patient is often so offensive that he cannot go into society and he becomes an object of disgust. A constant source of discomfort is the dripping of the purulent secretions into the throat sometimes producing inveterate bronchitis, which in its turn has been the exciting cause of pulmonary disease. WHAT TRUE MERIT WILL DO.

The unprecedented sale of Boschee's German Syrup within a few years, has astonished the world. It is with doubt the safest and best remedy ever discovered for the speedy and effectual cure of Coughs, Colds and the severest Lung troubles. It acts on an entirely different principle from the usual prescriptions given by Physicians, as it does not dry up a Cough and leave the disease still in the system; but on the contrary removes the cause of the trouble, heals the parts affected and leaves them in a purely healthy condition. A bottle kept in the house for use when the disease make their appearance, will save doctor's bills and a long spell of serious illness. A trial will convince you of these facts. It is positively sold by all druggists and general dealers in the land. Price, 75 cts., large bottles.

LAWYERS OF ST. LOUIS.

How Do They All Make a Living?—Waiting for a Client.

There are about 800 lawyers in the city looking over the records of the courts, that the legal business for 400,000 people is done by about 100 men. The lawyers who have the important cases in court can easily be counted, and any one walking along the streets down town, seeing whole big buildings apparently filled with lawyers, hearing lawyers' signs creaking everywhere, is struck with the question: "How do all these lawyers make a living?"

There are in the neighborhood of 800 lawyers in St. Louis who have apparently no visible means of support. There are corporations, who are comparatively unknown, there are office lawyers whom no one hears of outside the profession, though in it they have reputations greater than the fellows who figure in the newspapers. These men are the ones who delve among the authorities and pick out the fine points of law, and who trace back old laws and [illegible] to the beginning, that flaws may be found. When they are found, some lawyer with a reputation is given them; they are sprung on the court like a bombshell and carried to the higher courts and debated upon. Meanwhile the old burrower is digging and probing away for other points, and the leading member of the bar is leading a gay life and reaping all the honors, his exertion being no more than reciting a lesson he has learned. Nobody ever hears of the old John Burleyes, the production of whose brains are stolen by the Randal Leslies of the bar, while they are content to receive crumbs of the hundreds of dollars the others obtain in fees.

There is then another class of lawyers who seem to hang out their signs and have their cards printed for no other purpose than to get beyond the provisions of the vagrancy act. These are the dude lawyers—young fellows who always have lounges in their offices that they may turn in and sleep upon if out too late to go home to the fond parents, who pay their office rent and keep them in good clothes. They never have a case in court, and wouldn't know what to do with it if they got one. They spend their summers in going to base ball games and steamboat excursions, and their winters in billiard rooms or roller rinks. Again, there are the poor young lawyers, who wear out their pants waiting for clients who never come, and their heads in hoping against hope, and their minds in dreaming of what they would do in the event of getting a case.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Henry B. Stanton and His Son.

"Your great delight, when a little fellow 4 or 5 years old, was to have him make speeches to you, he pretending that you were a judge and himself an advocate. He used to seat you on the piano and then, with vehement gestures and pirouettings, would argue the case. Not one word of the speech did you understand. But you remained spellbound by the passion that was displayed, by the denouncing of witnesses and opposing counsel, by the laying down of the law to the judge—yourself—and by appeals to the jury—your older brothers, who were not less amused than you were by the whole performance. You never smiled nor took your eyes off of him for ten minutes on the stretch, when the court adjourned. One day in your father's absence I tried to amuse you in the same way, but I had scarcely uttered two sentences when the judge coolly clambered down from the bench and walked off, whether because moved by a mass of blind dislike of a feminine advocate, or the comparatively lifeless presentation of the case, I have never learned to this day. I never repeated the humiliating experiment."—Elizabeth Cady Stanton to Her Son.

Monkeys' Susceptibility to Tears.

If monkeys are susceptible of laughter and of manifesting delight, they are also capable of showing sorrow and of weeping. Humboldt says the saimiri of Peru are extremely sensitive, and that at the least cause of chagrin their eyes fill with tears. It has been asserted, on the other hand, that savages are incapable of weeping. This assertion, according to Houzeau, is contradicted by numerous observations. Hottentots have been seen to weep, as well as American Indians and the natives of Tahiti. However, the susceptibility to tears seems to diminish pari passu, with sociality and sensibility in the human family; per contra, real tears have been observed among dogs, deer and gazelles. Here another supposed characteristic of man disappears.—Henry Howard in Cosmopolitan.

Experiments Concerning Digestion.

A Dr. Chudnowski recently experimented on twelve Russian soldiers with a view to discovering the effect of cold applications to the epigastrium on the rapidity of digestion. Each soldier was regaled heartily; his epigastrium was properly refrigerated and the exciting contest began. Unfortunately for lovers of the weed, the competitors were divided into smokers and non-smokers. The rival teams digested their very hardest, but the non-smokers outdistanced the others by the space of one hour.—New York Sun.

In England he had hobnobbed with princes and dukes, but when he entered the room where Washington was waiting to give him a sitting he was embarrassed.

"It was the first and only time," said he, "that I ever felt awe in the presence of a fellow man."—Youth's Companion.

THE GREATEST DISCOVERY

Of the nineteenth century, can truly be said of Papillon extract of flax Skin Cure. Thousands testify to its wonderful curative powers in seemingly hopeless cases of Eczema, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas and every kind of skin diseases. Mr. O. P. Algier, of Hartford, Ohio, tried everything he heard of or saw recommended, and suffered five years with Eczema until he found Papillon Skin Cure, which cured him. Large bottles only $1.00.

Rheumatic Syrup Co.:

Last winter and spring I was a terrible sufferer from rheumatism in my [illegible] the most excruciating pain. I used several highly recommended remedies, but continued to suffer. Getting no relief I finally procured a bottle of Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup, took it according to directions, have used two bottles, and it cured me. I can with confidence recommend it to all who are suffering with rheumatic difficulty.

Very truly yours,
REVEREND JAS. BERRY.

Attention Asked for by Dr. A. M. Spaulding.

Rheumatic Syrup Co.:

Gentlemen.—I am prescribing Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup in my practice and unhesitatingly recommend it for the diseases which you claim it is good for. It is truly a remarkable medicine, composed as it is of the best known alteratives and tonics to be found in the Materia Medica. It operates upon the liver, kidneys and bowels destroying the poison in the blood and tissues. It is a grand tonic and appetizer, and truly a wonderful preparation. For a diseased stomach or a dyspeptic person it has no equal, and should have the approval of the medical faculty. Your Rheumatic Plasters are the best I have used, and should be worn over the chest by all who are affected with weak lungs or pains in their chest and stomach.

Very truly,
DR. A. M. SPAULDING.

as Mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do are ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury and is taken internally and acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure that you get the genuine it is taken internally and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co.

Everybody was just as happy about it however, and enjoyed themselves hugely.

The Franklin Union Literary and Lyceum met at the house of G. W. Allen, Feb. 25th. The literary part of the program was well carried out. The interest of the evening centered in the debate. The resolution "That the occupation of farming is more elevating mentally and morally than any other pursuit," was discussed at some length; much good argument was produced on both sides, and some funny things were said. Horse trading, doctoring grade sheep to make them appear full bloods, selling addled eggs, bad butter, etc., were among the points produced by the Neg., to show that the farmers were as much lacking morality as any class. The Aff. said horse trading and sheep lies not real farming at all. Many, if not most of our best men in all walks of life were raised on farms or subject to the influence of farm life in early years. This is but a few out of the o the judges were two Aff. one Neg. The society met at Ezra Simmons March 4 h. Mr. S—'s commodious parlors were well filled. The warm light of the open wood fire looked very cheerful indeed to the shivering guests, coming in out of the bleak March wind. The program was a long one, opening with instrumental music, piano Mrs. L Billington, banjo B. Billington, violin S. Simmons. Several dialogues which had been presented previously, were reproduced by special request, and a number of new ones were offered.

The society will meet at A. B. Wisner's March 11th. A short literary program will be presented and the question, Resolved, that fire is more destructive than water, will be discussed. Aff. S. Munger; Neg. O. Wisner. This simple question was chosen especially for the young debaters, of which there are a number in the society. March 18th, the society will meet at A. D. Hunt's, when a long literary program will be presented.

NORTHERN LENAWEE FARMER'S CLUB.

Notwithstanding the roads were terrible muddy, a goodly number met at John Lee's on March 2d.

The literary program was carried out by the addition of a song and oration by Master Winfred Allen, only six years old, which took the house by storm.

Then came the discussion of the Question—In what manner can we make the most profit from our farms with the least labor?

W. B. Keyser. In times of great depression the manufacturer, merchant, farmer and men of all occupations, study to see how their profits can be made larger. In looking over the past I think the farmer that followed mixed farming, that is only raising grain enough to feed the stock and wheat to keep seeded, comes out best, and yet not improvish their farms, producing figures that showed that about one-half of the cost of wheat and oats was labor, about two-thirds of the corn crop labor, while hay was only one-third labor.

O. P. Remington. We are generally accustomed to run too much to specialties. Some make money raising wheat as a special crop, but more do not; more pro it in barley. At present of stock, cattle and hogs we have plenty, but not enough of horses and sheep. The wise men at Washington have hurt our sheep business by reducing the tariff on wool.

J. F. N. Bowen. We plow too much. If we lose our seeding, plow again, thus further reducing the capacity of the soil to produce. When we get land well seeded let it alone and not plow up. Stock pays well and at present horses are paying a good profit to raise.

C. H. Keyser. There is labor in farming whether we make it pay or not. I have in mind a farm that is most wholly kept to grass and hay and it becomes richer and richer. Do not raise any kind of stock that you do not like. Brain and muscle go good together.

L. E. Taylor. Some farmers do not raise potatoes enough for their own use. I think there is money in potatoes. Plant on an old sod, put no fresh manure on, plant from June 1st. to 15th, don't put in too much seed, one eye on a piece and two pieces to a hill is a plenty. Cost of raising my potatoes two and three years ago were 16 and 17cts per bushel

The Club is to meet at Mrs. Almira McCollum's on March 16th. Program

Music—J. F. N. Bowen & Son.

Declamation—Albert Clark.

Reading—Adah Wakiron.
Charade—Misses Taylor.
Music—C. H. Keyser and Charles Rexford.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSONS.

Lesson for March 13th.

NOTES.—"Beersheba."—At the southern end of Palestine, where his father, Isaac, had his home.—"Toward Haran."—In Mesopotamia, across the Euphrates.—"A certain place."—On the place. The word mason, meaning place, seems to have been used of sacred spots where people went to worship.—"Put it under his head."—A stone may make a very good pillow for a tired traveler. Many people like the Egyptians and the South Sea Islanders, have used wooden or stone pillows.—"A ladder."—Hardly a wooden ladder is indicated, but an ascent by stairs, or an inclined plane.—"The Lord stood above it."—The Hebrew word may mean above it, or beside him. Dr. Delitzsch says that this passage is one of the composite ones which the compiler has made out of the two older narratives, one Elohistic and the other Jehovistic; that verses 11 and 12, Elohistic have been inserted in a Jehovistic passage, and could be omitted without interfering with the narrative. Then verses 13-16 are Jehovistic, and at verse 17 a Jehovistic passage occurs. Prof. W. H. Green, in the Sunday School Times, says it is "without reason and against all reason" to divide the passage.—"The Lord is in this place, and I knew it not."—He had not expected Jehovah to appear in this "place," where worship was paid to other gods.—"How dreadful!"—That is, what a place for reverent fear of God.—"The house of God, and the gates of heaven."—In his ignorance he imagined that Jehovah preferred to dwell in certain spots, his home, and the gate to heaven. The name of Babylon means Gate of God.—"Set it up for a pillar and poured oil upon the top of it."—Among the most common objects of reverence in both East and the West, have been long stones set up as sacred places. Oil would be poured on them in dedication or worship. The setting up of pillars for worship was forbidden. Deut. xvi. 22.—"Bethel."—Perhaps Luz was a little distance from Bethel, and the two names continued. Josh. xiv. 2.—"Then shall the Lord be my God."—Jehovah would be worshipped as Jacob's God. Very probably Jacob regarded other gods as real beings, properly worshiped by their devotees, though he would worship Jehovah, if Jehovah would preserve him.—"Of all the tenth to thee."—That was regarded as a fair amount to give.

INSTRUCTION.—Jacob left home because he had to. It was his own fault. He had lied and deceived his father and injured his brother. He was justly punished for his sin. Lying is bad business, and it is its peculiarity that its advantages all come at first, and its bad effects come afterward. So prudent a man as Jacob ought to have seen that. But craft is never so wise as straightforward honesty.

The connection between Heaven and earth is never broken. We can communicate both ways between Heaven and earth. We can still send our petitions up the stairway to Heaven, and the answers will be borne down to us by the messengers of God.

The hardest bed is happy if God's ladder rises beside it. Let a person feel that God is near by to comfort him, and he will make the hardest lot comfortable.

One man can make worship out of trial, a pillar out of a pillow of stone. Let us regard every trial as part of God's ordinance for us, and rejoice still in him.

God is around us, with us. If we live without seeing him and forget him it is our fault. To see him we only need the silent hour of meditation.

At night on our beds let us think of God's goodness to us, and trust in his goodness and promises, and we will awake stronger for the war of the next day.

Jacob was wrong when he thought the place where God was a place of fear. It is a place of joy and hope. The man who feats the place where God is is the man who has been living afar from God.

A vow is a good thing. It is a promise, a resolution, perhaps even a covenant. Such it seems to have been here, and this seems to be the first case of conversion mentioned in the Bible. A man is converted when he makes the resolve of Jacob that the Lord shall be his God, that Joshua, as for him and his house we will serve the Lord, that like Isaiah he will answer "Here am I," when the Lord asks, "Whom shall I send?"

There is a prudent, bargaining form about the vow of Jacob, but we must not make too much of that. It was more a prayer than a condition imposed on God. It was as much to say I will ask God to keep me and lead me in my way, and then shall be my God. It was a sort of covenant meant as piously as Jacob knew how.

Jacob set up a place of worship. Setting out for himself he made his public profession of faith in a place of worship, and set up a stone. It was as if he had taken a seat in a church.

There was a young girl from Kerkrade
They gave her a serenade
The tears ran down her nose
Down the bridge of her Roman nose
Her lover was a Dutchman
And he was a Dutch man
Wrapped in a Dutch blanket
Down in Dutch Hollow
Where he first met the fair
And fitted out the wild wagoon.

WOMAN'S SPHERE.

They talk about a woman's sphere,
As though it had a limit;
There's not a place in earth or heaven,
There's not a task of mankind given,
There's not a blessing or a woe,
There's not a whisper, yes or no,
There's not a life, or death, or birth,
That is not a feather's weight of worth,
Without a woman in it.

THE GREAT DEADWOOD MYSTERY.

BY BRET HARTE.

[Copyrighted 1886, by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., and published by arrangement with them.]

A very quiet, hesitating tap on the door was followed by the entrance of two men, both of whom, in general size, strength, and general air, seemed to be intensely alike. After a moment's hesitation, the foremost of the two, presumably the senior of the pair, addressed Mrs. Rightbody, a very upright, precise gentlewoman by a strongly marked Roman nose, and drawing two chairs opposite to her, he said:

"I presume I have the pleasure of addressing Mrs. Rightbody."

The lady inclined opposite Mrs. Rightbody. The elder man nodded, fixed his hat, and replied:

"Seventy four."

"Seventy five!" promptly followed the other.

Mrs. Rightbody paused a little, and continued:

"I have sent for you, sir, to be my counsel, because I understand from all the circumstances under which your application was made, that you were my late husband."

"The circumstances," replied Seventy four, quietly, "were in the plain, brief companionship, pointed out about in this yer style. We hung a man, and old Josh Silsbie down at Deadwood for hoss stealin'. When I say we, I speak for Seventy five yer as is present, as well as representin', so to speak, seventy two other gents as is scattered. We hung Josh Silsbie on spar', pretty spar', evidence. Afore he was strung up Seventy five yer axed him, as is the custom, of ther was anny thing he had to say, or anny request that he allowed to make of us. He turns to Seventy five yer, and—"

Here he paused suddenly looking at his companion.

"He sez, sez he," began Seventy five, taking up the narrative—"he sez, 'Kin I write a letter?' sez he. 'Sez I, 'Not much, fide man; ye've got no time.' 'Sez he, 'Kin I send a dispatch by telegraph?' I sez, 'Heave ahead.' He sez—these his identical words—'Send to Adam Rightbody, Boston. Tell him to remember his sacred compack with me thirty years ago.'"

"'His sacred compark with me thirty years ago,'" echoed Seventy four—"his identical words."

"What was the compact?" asked Mrs. Rightbody directly.

Seventy four looked at Seventy five, and then both arose and retired to the corner of the parlor, where they engaged in a slow but whispered deliberation. Presently they returned and sat down again.

"We allow," said Seventy four, quietly but decidedly, "that you know what that sacred compact was."

Mrs. Rightbody lost her temper and her truthfulness together. "Of course," she said hurriedly, "I know. But do you mean to say that you gave this information further than to explain before you murdered him?"

Seventy four and Seventy five both rose again slowly and retired. When they returned again and sat down, Seventy five, who by this time through some subtle magnetism, Mrs. Rightbody began to recognize as the superior spokesman, said gravely:

"We wish to say, regardin' this yer murder, that Seventy four and me is equally responsible, that we reckon also to represent, so to speak, seventy two other gentlemen as is scattered, that we are ready, Seventy four and me, to take out in that respect thy, now and at any time afore every man or mon as kin be fetched again us. We wish to say that this yer story of our holdin' out yer in California, or in any part of these United States."

"Or in Canada," suggested Seventy four.

"Or in Canada. We didn't agree to cross the water, or go to foreign parts, unless also be necessary. We have as the choice of weapons—I speak principal for myself, being a little curious, and interested, to arm me you have chosen—Arkansas toothpicks. An advertisement in one of the Sacramento papers, in a playful mood, has led Seventy four to the notion that I would carve with the yet principal of an agent of years will let him suffer."

Mrs. Rightbody, a little alarmed and desperate, saw her time. "I remember hearing of the duel," she said hastily. "I expected that you would have some trouble in this matter. I saw with Silsbie. Have you no clue to tell me—an hour, I might thought—good Mrs. Rightbody's mind—"

The two men looked at each other.

"I suppose you'd like to have a question to giving the information as it is," said Mrs. Rightbody eagerly.

Another quiet conversation in the corner, and the return of both men.

"We agree to say that we've no objection."

Mrs. Rightbody's heart leap high. Her boldness had made her penetrating. Yet she felt she must not alarm the men by hasty.

"Will you inform me to what extent Mr. Rightbody, my late husband, was interested in them?"

This time Seventy four and Seventy five consulted in the corner. She could hear them and feel that their discussion was more animated. There was less of conference. She was a little alarmed, however, lest they should hear her, and she said:

"We will say, to say that we don't allow to say how much."

"I will fetch it—afore."

"Do you not think that the 'sacred compact' between Mr. Rightbody and Mr. Silsbie referred to her?"

"We reckon it do."

Mrs. Rightbody, flushed and animated, would have given worlds had her daughter been present to hear this unbroken confirmation of her theory. Yet she felt a hysterical satisfaction in the discovery.

"Is she in, now?"

"She's in Tuolumne," said Seventy four.

"Is Tuolumne better or worse than formerly," added Seventy five.

"I see. They Mr. Silsbie entered her away."

"Well, ma'am, it's really said as she pined away. But it wasn't in vain, and it generally wasn't for stab."

Mrs. Rightbody ventured with her next question. "She was pretty, of course?"

The eyes of both men brightened.

"She was that," said Seventy four emphatically.

"It would have done you good to see her," added Seventy five.

Mrs. Rightbody inwardly doubted it, but before she could ask another question, the two men again retired to the corner for consultation. When they came back there was a shade more of kindness and confidence in their manner, and Seventy four opened his mind more freely.

"We wish to say, ma'am, looking at the thing by and large, in a far minded way, that, as you seem interested, and as Mr. Rightbody was interested, as it was, accord to all accounts, deceived and led away by Silsbie, that we don't mind listening to any proposition you might make as a lady—allowin' you was right interested."

"I understand," said Mrs. Rightbody quickly. "And you will furnish me with any papers."

The two men again consulted.

"We wish to say, ma'am, that we think she's got papers, but—"

"I must have them, you understand," interrupted Mrs. Rightbody, "at any price."

"We was about to say ma'am," said Seventy five slowly, "that, considerin' all things—and you being a lady—you kin have her papers, pedigree, and guaranty, for $1,200."

It has been alleged that Mrs. Rightbody asked only one question more and then fainted. It is known, however, that by the next day it was established in Deadwood that Mrs. Rightbody had confessed to the vigilance committee that her husband, a celebrated Boston millionaire, anxious to gain possession of Alice Springer's well known sacred papers, had married the intermediate Josh Silsbie to get at and that Josh, falling in this, the widow of the deceased Boston millionaire was now in personal negotiation with the owners.

Howbeit, Miss Alice, returning home that afternoon, found her mother with a violent headache.

"We will leave here by the next steamer," said Mrs. Rightbody languidly. "Mr. Ryder has promised to accompany us."

"But, mother—"

"The climate, Alice, is overrated. My nerves are already suffering from it. The association is not unfit for you, and Mr. Marvin is naturally impatient."

Miss Alice colored slightly.

"But your quest, mother?"

"I have abandoned it."

"But I have not," said Alice, quietly. "Do you remember my guide at the Yosemite, Stanislaus Joe? Well, Stanislaus Joe, I discovered it."

Mrs. Rightbody was languidly interested.

"Why, Stanislaus Joe is the son of Josh Silsbie."

Mrs. Rightbody sat upright in astonishment.

"Yes. But, mother, he knows nothing of what we know. His father treated him shamefully, and set him crippled adventures ago, and when he was found, the poor fellow, in short, disguised, changed his name."

"But, if he knows nothing of his father's compact, of what interest is this?"

"Oh, nothing. Only I thought it might lead to something."

Mrs. Rightbody suspected that something, and asked sharply. "And you have did you find it?" "Yes, I did not speak of it in the valley."

"Oh! I didn't think of it till to-day," said Miss Alice, walking to the window. "He happened to be here, and—told me."

PART IV.

IF Mrs. Rightbody's friends had been astounded by her singular and unexpected pilgrimage to California so soon after her husband's decease, they were still more astonished by the information, a year later, that she was engaged to be married to Mr. Ryder, of whom, only the most honorable was known, that he was a Californian, and formerly a speculator of her husband. It was undoubtedly that the man was wealthy, and evidently no mere adventurer. It was rumored that he was young, handsome and manly, but even those who delighted in his off humor were shocked at his grammar and slang. It was said that Mr. Marvin had had some interview with his fiancée, in which it was broken off. The following story more or less authentic, was circulated that per[illegible]

"Well, Alice, what do you want?"

"Oh, dear me! The cabinet contained only his papers, all perfectly arranged. You know how methodical your father was. Bankers' and business and private letters, all in their proper place. Nothing was thrown away."

"Let us see them," said the young man, yawning.

They opened drawer after drawer, filled with all kinds of papers and business papers, separately tied and filed. Suddenly Alice uttered a little cry and pocketed one quaint ivory paper knife lying at the bottom of a drawer.

"It was missing the next day, and never could be found; he must have mislaid it here. This is the drawer, said Alice eagerly.

Here was a clew. But the lower part of the drawer was filled with old letters not labeled, yet neatly arranged in ties. Suddenly he stopped and said, "Put them back, Alice, at once."

"Why?"

"Some of these letters are in my father's handwriting."

"The more reason why I should see them, said the girl imperatively. "Here, you take part and I'll take part and we'll get through quicker."

There was a certain decision and independence in her manner which he had learned to respect. He took the letters and in silence read them with her. They were old college letters, so filled with boyish dreams, ambitions, aspirations, and Utopian theories, that I fear neither of these young people even [illegible] the past. They were both grave, until Alice uttered a little hysterical cry and dropped her face in her hands. Joe was instantly beside her.

"It's nothing, Joe, nothing. Don't read it, please, please, don't. It's so funny—it's so very queer."

"It's nothing, Joe, nothing."

But Joe had already read a single line, and his face, as he looked at the letter, was as pale as hers. He read aloud the words which [illegible] many years ago.

Joe Silsbie looked down, took the girl laughing, half frightened at her husband's kissed her forehead, and with tears in his gray eyes, said, "Amen!"

Flakes of snow, unprecedented in size, the seemingly unimportant events of life succeed one another, now gathers together, so are its forms. No single flake added to the pile produces a change. No single action however it may exhibit a character.

Crowded house greeted the Donavin Musical Comedy Co. at Bandage last night, and to say that every one in the house went home pleased, would come nearer telling the truth than anything that could be said in their favor. Every member of the troupe is a performer in his or her line, and none but appears in the cast. The singers are excellent, and delight the audience in the best manner. Miss Emma Hyers as Kalooma, the mischievous, was particularly fine. Her soubrette, better by far than the efforts of the comedienne on the stage to day. Wallace King has a particle of that pure, clear, silver toned tenor voice which he is credited with. He is a gentleman, and which has placed him at the head of American tenors to day. Sam Lucas is as good as ever, and kept the house laughing from beginning to end. Mrs. Lucas is a prodigy in the musical world, being a complete master of the violin and mandolin. Hundreds were turned away from the spacious hall who could not be admitted. He enlists the sympathy of all who listen to him and sets men, women and children to thinking and acting." A fairly good house greeted the Donavin Comedy Co. in "Out of Bondage" last night. For downright amusement and music this company is hard to beat. Sam Lucas and Kalooka are a team, and are as funny as ever, keeping the house in an uproar. All are excellent singers, both of popular and classics music. Mrs. Sam Lucas is a valuable addition to the company, playing charmingly on the violin, the cornet and mandolin. Those who love music, melodies, fun and laughter can find as much in an evening with this company as any place. Danville Ill. Daily News, Sept. 21.

Why should at Tecumseh organize a company to bore for oil or gas? It would be in the nature of an experiment, of course, but the residents of the village could well afford to expend the necessary funds to try the experiment. We should be pleased to hear the views of some of our citizens on this subject.

Proprietary Medicines

A visit to Dr. Green's Laboratory, at Woodbury, N. J., has completely changed our views, and especially our prejudices in regard to what are generally known as "Standard Patent Medicines." Of course we are getting to that age in life when we are forced to conclude LIFE itself is a humbug, and naturally distrust anything that has not withstood long and tried experiences. Being a physician I had the curiosity to know how such a sale of two medical preparations could be sustained for so many years. The perfect system upon which the business is conducted, and the pharmaceutical arrangements for the manufacture of the two recipes with which we were made acquainted, are sufficiently convincing proofs that the Anti-Fever for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaints, and Rose Blossom GERMAN SYRUP for Throat and Lung trouble, were for the complaints they are recommended, most excellent remedies, and only regret that in much of our practice, medical ethics prevent us from prescribing them without making the formulas public. When we wish to show the great quantity of voluntary letters having been forwarded Dr. Green from all parts of the country, and from a [illegible] people, lawyers, merchants and others, giving a close account of their adoption, testimonials of cures are [illegible] like and using Dr. Green's [illegible] that the trade-marked [illegible] Formulas, [illegible] of [illegible] by [illegible] Colonel John N. MEMORIAL OF MRS. MARANDA DEWEY

Died at her residence in the village of Tecumseh, Michigan, on Monday, February 28th, 1887, aged seventy two years and eight months, widow of the late L. D. Dewey. Mrs. Dewey's maiden name was Olmsted, born in [illegible]. She came with parents to Detroit in the year 1818. There Mrs. Thomas Sheldon became acquainted with the young and active little girl, Maranda, and with the advice of her husband the child was adopted. [illegible] during all the comforts and friendships of an affectionate and cheerful home until eighteen years of age. She remembered very well which, just two years of age, accompanying Hon. Thomas Sheldon and wife on the taking passage on the first steamboat that ever came to Detroit, also the first and only passage the pioneer steamboat, Walk in the Water, ever passed over Lake Huron. In the year 1833 she made the acquaintance of L. D. Dewey, who was then stage agent and general manager of all the mail routes which left Detroit. On the third day of October Miss Olmsted was married to L. D. Dewey, at the beautiful home residence of Mr. Sheldon on Jefferson Avenue, Detroit. The year 1836 Mr. Dewey and wife moved to his pleasant farm one mile west of Tecumseh Village. Here she resided for three years, and died at her cottage home in the village of Tecumseh. She was sick two months with cancer in the stomach. She was the mother of six children, all married and all at the funeral. It is very seldom any one has better care than she received from kind friends. A kind and loving mother, a true and neighborly Christian, she was a woman of strong constitution, endowed not with a great variety of talents, but those she possessed were permanent, implicit and implacable in their nature. Her last words were, "I'm ready to go home." F. A. D.

Sentimental and Comic Songs.

An interesting fact about sentimental songs may be noted, and that is, only sentimental songs make any money. Humorous songs are very popular. They are applauded to the echo when a favorite singer sings them, but they do not sell. The publisher's experience with Jim Bludsoe, a semi-humorous song being sung in music-halls by an inexpressive singer with very faint effect. Hygeia in the Dog Days.

She wouldn't have eaten roast duck I know, for how would she have combated the fierce heat by way of keeping herself cool? Would she have eaten lowest lagers and weakest claret north Britain, hams and beef in Yorkshire, and tripe and onions in London? And what of the goddess had to much respect for herself as a goddess to indulge in such plebeian and tedious diversions in hot weather. I am just sure she in a scanty attitude on the top of a marble column such as Alma Tadema loves to paint, she would be fanning herself in a way that makes one feel cool to look at her, as her [illegible] in the blue Egean sea, the cool marble [illegible] and water, and grapes and [illegible] all of [illegible] Dog Hygeia [illegible] such [illegible] Chicago Inter-Ocean.

The Wonderful Sales and Cures in the Old Bay State Stirs up the Population.

From Jackson Daily Citizens Dec. 23 1886.

As an illustration of the demand for goods which have in themselves the merit any quantity claimed for them, the Citizen must tell its readers a story about the Hubbard Rheumatic Syrup and Plasters. Some eleven months ago a New York paper contained a short advertisement of the [illegible]

A subscriber to the paper, John W. Hewins, a prominent ship builder of New Bedford, Mass., read the notice, and on May 3d wrote the company, ordering one half dozen bottles, and plasters. On June 17 he ordered a dozen more of each, stating that he was [illegible] the first order. On Sept. 15 Mr. Hewins ordered three dozen more, [illegible] giving this order he remarked: "I have been a sufferer with rheumatism for twenty years, and have expended large sums of money in treatment, but I never found anything half so good as your remedy. It has cured me." Now, as the gentleman gave another order for a gross of each, and asked for the State agency of Massachusetts, on Dec. 11 he ordered a requested that the goods be shipped with the greatest dispatch by express. "Never saw anything like it."

On Dec. 20 William Hathaway, of the same place, wrote for the agency of the State, stating that the remedy was in great demand. "Everybody who has tried it is relieved. It's wonderful."

Now, here are records of the sales of hundreds of bottles purely upon the merits of the remedy. The Citizen reporter saw the letters written by the gentlemen herein mentioned, and gleaned the facts published.

FREE TRADE.

The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off of revenue stamps from Proprietary Medicines, no doubt has largely benefited the consumers, as well as relieving the burden of home manufactures. Especially is this the case with Green's August Flower and Boschee's German Syrup, as the reduction of thirty six cents per dozen, has been added to increase the size of the bottles containing these remedies thereby giving one-fifth more medicine in the 75 cent size. The August Flower for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, and the German Syrup for Cough and Lung troubles, have perhaps, the largest sale of any medicine in the world. The advantage of increased size of the bottles will be greatly appreciated by the sick and afflicted, in every town and village in civilized countries. Sample bottles for 10 cents remain the same size.

A SONNET.

Man, caged in life beneath the sky and stars,
Life's problem Ever will his soul complain,
As is also a bird's heart beneath its prison bars,
And when he marks all human nature's scars
And imperfections, bleeds still with pain.
He knows the garment of the flesh hath lain
Around the soul and on its beauty mars
Is his, the sickbed, pain and strength wasted
Than all the living of each pain and loss,
And all the wending that existence bore
For this we lay aside earth's weary dress,
And walk, delight upon a fairer shore.
Lady M. Krone Stapleton.

The Beggars of Constantinople.

The numerous beggars, who are always at hand, mustering their wants of famine to the dining of a relay or their curses to the unfeeling passenger. The majority are blind, or pretend to be so, and each one has his preferred spot, where he sits in his rags, perfectly oblivious to all but his own wants. [illegible] and the offensive part is always held up to view, in the hope of exciting pity. These are mostly men. The women and children have their beaten track over which they follow people and implore alms. They seem to go no further, and often by the emphatic repetition of "biddy eit" we rid ourselves of them sooner. We seldom see them rewarded, except by Turkish subjects, and it is said that they give freely, as the Koran requires it of them. They are particularly generous on all days of special religious observance. At such times these beggars congregate in the most attractive places, and doubtless make large sums.—Constantinople Cor. San Francisco Chronicle.

How Ned Buntline Lived.

His time was pretty equally divided—"all summer in the field, all winter in the study." In a letter to the writer he once remarked that he had no love for the cities, but was happiest in the country, where the music of birds and breezes, and the swaying branches and flowing waters around him. His hunting, [illegible] excites engage all kinds of game, and his trouble with [illegible] rod extended to every quarter of the United States. He preferred buffalo, elk and antelope hunting to all other rod sports, and to sum up stated, for [illegible] salmon and trout fishing. His library, sanctum and armory, he remarked, were one. Guns, rifles, fly rods, pistols, etc., could be seen in every corner, and around his bookcases were many relics of the field and stream. The picturesque sanctum of the novelist and sportsman is carefully kept in order by loving hands, and the casual visitor at the Eagle's Nest may behold it in much the same condition as when the gifted Ned Buntline lived.—Will Wildwood in Turf, Field and Farm.

Rival Lines in Japan.

We hear a great deal about rival telegraph lines, and the expedients to which different companies resort to crapple one another, such as cutting wires, etc., but according to a writer in Good Words, the spiders of Japan resent the competition of telegraph thread spinners in an original and effective manner. Spiders are one of the great obstacles to telegraphers in Japan. Filling the trees along the line these insects spin their webs between the earth, the wires, the post, the insulators and the trees. When these webs become wet with dew they constitute a good conductor, and the lines are found to be in connection with the earth. The only method of obviating this inconvenience is by employing brooms of bamboo to brush away the webs. But as the spiders are more active than the workmen employed in this work, the difficulty is not the less serious.—Swiss Cross.

Brigham Young's Sunflowers.

The traveler on the overland train may trace the path over which Brigham Young and his lieutenants led the hosts of infatuated fanatics; for it is marked by lines of golden sunflowers which in the summer months glorify the monotonous landscape with their splendid color. The seeds of this flower were sown by those that went first, for the benefit of those who should follow. Lack of fuel is one of the gravest hardships that beets the emigrant in crossing the plains for nothing grows upon the desolate alkali without irrigation. Brigham Young discovered, however, that the sunflower would thrive in a soil which produced nothing spontaneously, and as it grows here to a great height, the dried stalks have proved a blessing to the occupants of many an emigrant wagon, whether Mormon or Gentile.—Cor. Boston Transcript.

The Shipment of Gold.

Gold is shipped across the ocean in "specie kegs" made of extra hard wood with an extra iron hoop, each keg containing $5,000. In the interests of security each keg is treated to what is technically known among the shippers as the "red taping" process. At each end of the keg in the projecting ends of the staves above the head are bored four holes at equidistant intervals. A piece of red tape is run through these holes, crossed on the head of the keg and the ends finally glued in the center. At the point of meeting the tapes are sealed to the keg's head by the wax bearing the stamp of the shipper. Gold crosses the ocean very much as does every other kind of freight, without any special packing after, though some houses scrupulously limit the amount trusted to any one ship to $250,000.

The Lure of a Singer.

In his "Why We Sing" Hayden Pike elaborates the idea that vocalists excel in singing in proportion as they possess a peculiarly overbalancing vest of face. The proportionate number of face, he says, detected by nature for a purpose, is one in which the upper jaw, upper lip, upper cheek bone, nose and forehead are the prominent and predominant parts, and the chin and lower jaw the recessive parts; only persons thus formed have been found capable of singing with the proper expression.

Mother, said a little girl to her parent, who [illegible] charitable institutions, "I wish I were an orphan!" "Why so my dear?" "Because I should see more of you; for you are always going to the orphan asylum."

I was afflicted for several years with a disordered liver, which resulted in a severe attack of jaundice. I had as good medical attendance as our section affords, who failed utterly to restore me to the enjoyment of my former good health. I then tried the favorite prescription of one of the most renowned physicians of South Carolina, but to no purpose, whereupon I was induced to try Simmons Liver Regulator. I found immediate relief from its use, and it ultimately restored me to the full enjoyment of health.

An Imperative Necessity

What pure air is to an unhealthy locality, what spring cleaning is to the neat house-keeper, so is Hood's Sarsaparilla to every body, at this season. The blood needs to be thoroughly renovated, the most purifying and invigorating medicine should be used. Hood's Sarsaparilla, the most popular and successful spring medicine, eradicates the germs of disease, destroys scrofula, salt rheum, and all other blood disorders are cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla, the most popular and successful spring medicine.

"Mother," said a little girl to her parent, who takes a great interest in charitable institutions, "I wish I were an orphan!" "Why so my dear?" "Because I should see more of you, for you are always going to the Orphan's home."

The latest art work among ladies is known as the "Etched Glass," for decorating china, glassware, etc. It is something entirely new, and is still profitable and fascinating. It is to other Eastern cities. To learn the art, we will send to any address, on receipt of 25 cents, an elegant china plaque, size 8 inches, handsomely decorated for use, and put together with box of material, embracing designs assorted in flowers, animals, soldiers, landscapes, etc., complete, with full instructions, upon receipt of only $1.00. The plaque alone is worth more than the amount charged. To every lady ordering this outfit who encloses the address of five other ladies interested in Art matters, to whom we can mention we will send a copy of Art Goods, we will enclose extra and without charge a copy of our illustrated catalogue. Address "The Etching Art," Syracuse, N. Y.

The Verdict Unanimous.

"Will Sam. Druggist, Rippey, Iowa, testifies: "I can recommend Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup as the very best remedy I have found for my customers. One dose gives relief and was cured of Rheumatism of years standing." Also from Hon. Druggist, Bedville, Ohio, adds: "The most selling medicine I have ever handled in my 20 years experience is Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. Unsolicited testimonials like these are received every day. Sold by all druggists, that the Verdict is unanimous in favor of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. Price only 25 cents, a full dollar a bottle.

C. A. Wright & Co.

"When asked, Tom, what do you think of a man who could live on half a loaf for two years?" "The Baker," replied Brown, with a twinkle in his Taylor. "Quick."

Take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in the spring of the year, to purify the blood, invigorate the system, restore the appetite, and prevent the prevailing epidemics from fastening upon the weakened and exhausted system. Nothing else so well adapted to do all this.

These pretty little pills are such a delicious cathartic, so easy to take, so prompt in their action, so sure to do good, that everybody should use them. Ayer's Cathartic Pills.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Combines, in a proportion peculiar to itself, the active medicinal properties of the best blood-purifying and strengthening remedies of the vegetable kingdom. It will positively cure when in the power of medicine. Spring Debility, Headache, Dyspepsia, Cold Sweats, Salt Rheum, Scrofula, and all other diseases caused by a low state of the system.

Is so vastly superior to any other sarsaparilla or blood medicine. The death-giving diseases of the blood and entire human organism are much more positive than in the past quarter of a century ago. The power of to-day is in advance and takes precedence of all other medicines.

I take Hood's Sarsaparilla, and think I am improved. Mrs. M. T. Davis, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Hood's Sarsaparilla heals all sores, and is worth its weight in gold. E. Harris, Sole Agent, Rock Stream, New York City.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

I do not believe that Ayer's Sarsaparilla has an equal as a cure for Scrofulous Humors. It is pleasant to take, gives strength by the bottle, and produces a permanent effect which any medicine I have used. Hughes, North Lewisburg, Ohio.

I have tried Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and it has done all that can be claimed for it. Its effect was marvellous. I would gladly endorse it for the disease.—W. F. Fowler, M. D., Grand Ledge, Mich.

For forty years I have suffered with Erysipelas. I have tried many remedies, but found no permanent relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After taking ten bottles of this medicine I am completely cured. M. C. Amesbury, Rockport, Mo.

I have suffered for years from Catarrh, which was so severe that it destroyed my appetite and weakened my system. After trying other remedies without relief, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and in a few months was cured. Sarah L. Cook, 22 Allston St., Boston, Mass.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla is superior to any other blood purifier that I ever tried. I have taken it for Scrofula, Catarrh, and Salt Rheum, and have found it a perfect cure. Mrs. Mary A. Nye, Cambridge, Mass.

A SHREWD DEVICE.

To dwell at any length on the youth and early struggles of Felix Hailstone would be death an unnecessary and ... interesting ... the voluminous, untiring drill and middle aged writer of fiction he claims our attention, and with the exception therefore, of some immediately following biographical sentences this narrative will ...

Probably his direst enemy could not devise any more fatal gift to a young, aspiring and promising author than a sudden succession to half a million of money, but in Mr. Hailstone's case, the unexpected possession of a sum, but little a paltry than that, mentioned proved no ... stumbling block to labor. He was ... him money in the sole shady or possible means of ever seeing his shylocks in any other garment than that of tips and handwritings. A magnificent inventive, therefore, was our friend's half million. He loved the pride of novelist as no gain ever did before, and from the days of monetary prosperity all that which publishers had refused to publish, all that which editors had shudder at appeared in which form the author pleased—and he chose the most handsome form—at his own expense. Hailstone rubbed bindings with all the most popular wares in the market. Such experience as money could buy Felix bought. He interested himself in literary companies; took sub-editorships on decaying journals, lost large sums, and, finally, himself floated an illustrated monthly magazine after a scheme of his own evolution. The word "flood," however, as having more than a suggestion of buoyancy or specific lightness about it, must be deemed ill-chosen when treating of any such periodical as "The Torch." The first number of this trifle would have anchored the "Great Eastern" in a gale. Hailstone himself contributed two thirds of the initial venture, which, thus handicapped, sputtered to the extent of a three-copy circulation and expired.

The ordinary railway novel—with a sensational picture of some lady doing nothing on the outside—was for a period of ten years, our author's main method of keeping himself before the public, and his next undertaking of importance appears to have been a serial, journal. Engaging for this a literary man who understood the distribution of prize watches by coupon, the value of puzzles, competitions, and so forth—matters which, in these days, when everybody reads, are essential to the existence of a new social weekly—Mr. Hailstone produced, in winter time, on paper, well calculated to light fires, his periodical. It ran till the weather grew warmer, and Felix always reckoned the effort among his successes.

With a bound we now come to the days of the "Shocker"—the "Shilling shocker." Our author gloried in this new departure. He burst upon the public with flashes of lightning on his covers; he tempted the elect with insidious titles and enigmatical pictures; he crept into men's hearts by printing every chapter of his lucubrations on paper of a different color; he displayed, in fine, more ingenuity than his best friends had ever credited him with; and some went so far as to foretell that he might yet gain the public ear.

In justice to Mr. Hailstone we may here say, once and for all, that he had admirers, though unfortunately of a class who discounted their approval and admiration. He was a man of wealth, be it remembered, and as such gave a vast deal of occupation to that large community of licensed vendors of poison, than some ... drying methods for emptying such men's pockets. These people not only found good and much of moral instruction in Felix's works, but generally took the liberty of mentioning it, together with other irrelevant facts. Some of his readers had large families. Hailstone discovered some, only one arm; some, a stroke; one wrote with the water he washed in because ink could not be purchased without money; one admirer was not far from death, another from starving. Our author's writing on an empty stomach, by the by, must, humanely speaking, have meant years off a man's life.

Mr. Hailstone, however, was blessed with common sense in large quantities, a fact accounting in some measure, possibly, for his lack of success in fiction. He perfectly well knew that his books were not far off the road, and determined to break new ground and tempt fortune with something historical. A novel the book should be, in name, and in name only, he decided. People might read the coming volume for plot if they chose; but, as a teacher, as a crystallized epitome of a bygone era, the book must live; that Mr. Hailstone was determined. Condescending to no rhetorical questions as to what really does or does not constitute the past, Felix boldly put the matter beyond all dispute and laid his plot in the year 1870. Then he read up the period, for his pen dry, and lived, for the space of a month, among books other than his own. After which course of study, ordering in ink as another man might order in table ale, the author wrote twelve hours a day, six days a week, and corrected for the press upon the seventh.

With the production of this ponderous and historically accurate work we bring Felix to the most important period of his whole life; that in which the "Hailstone Competition" first entered his mind, and from which this narrative properly has its being.

Mr. Hailstone was 50 years of age and had written hard upon twice the number of novels, when one day, in his morning newspaper, he chanced to see an advertisement, of which the substance was as follows:

"Three prizes of small value were offered for the longest lists of characters from the fiction of Thackeray. What measure of success attended this speculation is not generally known, but he or she who devised this competition has, without question, a very considerable claim on Mr. Hailstone, and may, indeed, long since have pushed it."

Felix read and ruminated, then a great thought spread its light over his face, and terrific possibilities entered his mind. Advertisements both bold and subtle he had tried and tried again, but nothing calculated to carry his name all over the world, and certainly nothing in the slightest degree likely to raise universal interest in his writings. Now, however, both these much desired consummations appeared within measurable distance of fulfillment. Substitute, if you please, Mr. Hailstone's name for that of the great novelist already mentioned, enormously increase the sums of money to be offered as prizes, and you see our friend's scheme in a nutshell.

Now, Thackeray has a mere trifle of some 3,000 characters in his works of fiction, but this number sinks into nothingness when compared with Hailstone's creations. From the moment when, at 7 years of age, his youthful mind saturated in nursery fable, little Felix, with much inking of fingers, scrawled something which a proud father caused to be printed verbatim, to the days we now treat of, the writer's figment had numerically increased with years, and, in the ... impossibility that ... women ... owed their existence to his ... energy and brains.

Mr. Hailstone, he also once perfected, came to ... the ... people ... [illegible] ... work so far ... would content. His advertisement, shall we say, appeared among the miscellanies of literature, we here transcribe.

"Felix Hailstone will give the sum of ... for the three first complete lists of characters in the novels of the late Mr. Thackeray. All lists must be ... Hailstone Competition ... including contributions would do well ...

"Mr. Hailstone ... monthly, and what is intended in the competition up to September next. By the ... every English-speaking ... will enjoy equal chances of success with the United Kingdom.

"Any inquiries or communications addressed to 'The Office,' as above, will receive immediate attention. Bankers, Messrs. Misery & Iron, London.

"There is no entrance fee of any kind."

From the first Mr. Hailstone's undertaking assumed gigantic proportions, and the interest occasioned by his manifesto, as soon as its genuineness and solidity were put beyond question, appeared very considerable indeed.

Ninety-three English publishers were upon our author's track immediately, and double that number of American ones also busied themselves—not with Hailstone, but his writings. Though he made no money in America, however, Felix came fairly well out of much piracy and tribulation, for, amidst reproduction, reviews and reproaches, he was read, and the laws of international copyright, for once, played an author's game in spite of himself.

At home matters fell out differently. Hailstone became a notable man; a good deal was written of him and his books; these latter suddenly acquired extrinsic value, and the English rights of reproducing them were paid for in sums of three figures.

New editions of Hailstone became the order of the day, and hardly a man or woman, though he or she might have no intention of actually participating in the coming contest, but bought one at least of the now celebrated novels.

Then was "The Torch" relighted; then did the "Shockers" pile themselves feet high on the book stalls, and the historic tome extend its ponderous form; for thousands of eager brains were devoting themselves to Hailstone and all his works.

Certain novels—perhaps ten in all—their author refused to republish, thereby giving rise to much excitement, much despair among those who could not procure the works in question, much jubilation among those who did.

Literary papers, amidst their chronicles of rare book finds, imminent sales of scarce publications, and so forth, would contain such items of news as the following:

"Mr. Jones, of Peckham Rye, was fortunate enough on Friday last to discover in a cupboard, unopened for many years, Felix Hailstone's 'Fallen Angel,' a novel of which only thirteen copies are in existence. The prologue has unfortunately been eaten by mice."

Or this:

"Two dustmen, in the exercise of their vocation yesterday afternoon in West Kensington, simultaneously chanced upon Hailstone's 'Tiger Lily' in a place where, until the present sensation period, it might naturally have been expected, the seven cats came to blows and now each is said to possess half the book. It parted at page 207."

The novel we may mention, was eventually sold and the two parties who purchased it, a company of ten speculators who turned "The Tiger Lily" with care and success into another copy turned up in Yorkshire.

People got into prison over the Hailstone competition as a sure sign that the scheme was doing well. Many spurious volumes purporting to be from Hailstone's pen appeared, but there was in these, invariably, some shadow of probity or interest which convicted the authors without need of Felix's own disclaimer. These gentlemen suffered at the hands of justice, and nature herself was also reported as having victims to the Hailstone competition; but whether a prolonged and severe intercourse with our author's fiction really did on any occasion turn a sane man into a lunatic cannot now be known with truth. Ten thousand pounds is a large sum of money, and men have certainly before now risked the madhouse for less than half of it.

In truth the laurels of fame rested at last on Felix Hailstone's brow. Somebody brought out a new pair of leaves which rendered the domestic light a thing of no further account, and so our novel, it was this revolutionary suspender dedicated. Then a biography with portraits of Hailstone appeared, and a gentleman, who, it was rumored, would take a prize in the competition, but who ultimately failed to get among the first ten, brought forward a work entitled "Hailstoniana." The "Hailstone Birthday Book" also enjoyed some patronage, and at a theatre, where you went in without cost and then paid for programmes, fresh air and other necessaries, brisk business was reported to be doing with something ponderous and dismal, attributed to Hailstone's early youth.

Meantime our author kept his word to the public, and, amidst all the labors arising from his great undertaking, produced, monthly, a brand new and original novel, but not, it need hardly be said, at his own expense. Publishers had high, and probably never, since the earliest cave man scratched a mark with one bone upon another attached a meaning to that mark and thereby foreshadowed literature, has matter, so minutely valueless, become possessed of greater value. Pages might be devoted to incidents arising out of the "Hailstone Competition," but as these would weary a dozen readers where they amused one, it will be best to hasten on toward the impending climax.

December waned, and letters began to pour into Felix's office. No lists with fewer than 5,000 names in them stood the smallest chance of ultimate success, and vast numbers were daily destroyed. Tons of waste paper had to be carted away, the worn out clerks demanded an increase of salary and got it, newspapers each morning published the names of those who headed the poll, some sold their interest in the affair to speculators. One competitor, with a total of 6,239, who, on Dec. 23, stood very many points ahead of any other, was offered £10,000 for his chance, but refused to take it. Another, whose list had been lost in the post, committed suicide.

With the Australian mail arrived between 400 and 600 letters ... [illegible] ... however, and a competitor from New York only just missed the third place at the closing of the contest. Two hundred London letters came in with a rush on the last day of all, and a crowd ... beneath the walls of the Hailstone Competition office. Long ... waited till finally, at 3 o'clock on New Year's morning, with the cry of "It's jangling so fast!" the result was made known to them. A blaze of electric light illuminated the window upon which the eyes had so long been fixed, and upon a sudden appeared the following legend:

Mr. T. J. of London
Mr. F. Williams, Leeds
Susanna Green, London

London had won the competition, and right, and the hurricane of cheers which greeted the news was heard in the suburbs of Paris, distant 40 miles from the scene of action.

Mr. Hailstone, in whose house the cheering was renewed, appeared at the window after a short pause and made the following statement:

"Every line, said he, that I ever remember to have had published has been secured by Messrs. Jones and Williams, but the former, by some extraordinary chance, has come into possession of a fragment that I wrote when a infant, a fragment which my father, the late Felix Hailstone, of Mincing Lane, had printed exactly as it left my childish pen. This fairly comes under the conditions of my original manifesto, it is fiction and written by me."

The biography which robbed Mr. Williams of £10,000 and put that sum into the pocket of Mr. Jones, is worth the trouble of transcribing.

"There was wunce a boy called Jim Jim ran away to c to c korul rejes and parns he was drounded.

"Felix Hailstone
"Aged 7 years."

So ended the Hailstone competition. What it cost its originator and what good it did to him would be too considerable a question for mere passing inquiry. Some people declare that Felix actually made money by his scheme; others, that he lost half his fortune and gained nothing, but Hailstone himself never touched upon this point to us, and, after all, the subject is a purely personal one. Let us leave our author, therefore, in the halcyon hour of success. He was heard to say, not long since, that a fear, almost amounting to a conviction, troubled him. When questioned upon the color of his alarm, he answered that the possibility of some day "writing himself out," of some day finding that he had said all he has got to say, weighed heavily on his soul.

There is something singularly touching, modest and groundless in this apprehensions.—Eden Phillpotts in Harper.

Size of the Brain.

The average weight of the brain in men is forty seven ounces, and in women some four or five ounces less; the human organ being absolutely heavier than that of any of the lower animals except the elephant and the whale, with brains of ten and five pounds respectively. As a rule, mental capacity and the size of the brain quite closely correspond, and it has been observed that a brain weight of less than thirty two ounces in an adult person is always accompanied by a deficiency in intellect. The rule has its exceptions, however, a notable one being that of Gauss, the mathematician, whose brain, less than forty-four ounces, is attracting the attention of French anthropologists. A contrasting case has recently been furnished in an idiot with a brain of thirty five ounces.

Familiar great brains are those of Cuvier and Webster, each exceeding 64 ounces; of Dupuytren, 59 ounces; Descartes, Raphael and Voltaire had small heads, while that of Napoleon was only slightly above the average, and that of Schiller not at all. The highest Japanese record weighed eight ounces, a foolscap to an idiot boy, and that of an idiot woman weighed ten ounces. The average brain of Englishmen is 49 ounces, that of Frenchmen a little over 45 ounces, that of Dutch, Italians, Spaniards, Laps and Negroes nearer the English, while the German brain is heavier. In India the weight is from 41 to 44 ounces, in Africa 43, and in America 49.—Arkansas Traveler.

An Office Seeker's Proboscis.

Tourgee Wood used to lounge about among the waiting part of the office of New York, with a most resplendent nose, they presume, which was "A" on the purpose of visiting an office of ... Brooks. Being summoned, he to appear before the governor, who was a strict temperance man, in that case he by the advice of a waggish physician, applied a flax seed poultice to his nose, before going to bed the night previous to the intended interview with the governor. The next morning he appeared at the executive table with his nose blanched and purpled, looking for all the world like a wine-worn veteran. The doctor was himself an applicant for other favors at the same hand, and had taken the precaution to advise, but when he found the man had actually applied the flax seed, he cut out of the bag. The boarders were accordingly on the lookout to greet the patient in the morning, and when the nose appeared there was such a roar of laughter at the table that the poor fellow had to change his lodgings before he could get the temperance governor.—Det. The Germ of Diphtheria.

According to Dr. Lewis, of this city, the germ of diphtheria is so nearly like that of common putrefaction that it is very difficult to tell them apart. Diphtheria germs are more active and virulent than those of common putrefaction. Nevertheless, the latter may cause, in persons who have delicate mucous membranes, an attack of cankered sore throat. This is seldom fatal, but is often infectious to young children, and develop in them true diphtheria. Any adult affected with sore throat should never, therefore, kiss a child, especially upon its lips. The affectionate caress may cause the child's death.—Boston Budget.

An Old Superstition.

The Hungarian peasants still believe the old superstition about the foreign, the blood of infants or young children in certain of their rites, a belief brought conspicuously to light four or five years ago in the trial of a Jew for child murder, one of the children of the accused being the principal witness against its parent. In Roumania, Bulgaria and Roumelia it is even worse, the peasantry of these countries being even more ignorant and superstitious.—Buda-Pesth Cor. San Francisco Chronicle.

A DEMOCRAT ON PROHIBITION

The subjoined letter was sent to A. P. Coddington of Tecumseh to the Detroit Free Press and was declined. At the request of many friends of the enfranchisement cause in Tecumseh we republish it. In justice however to the Editor we quote his reasons for refusing to publish it. "We believe in the utmost latitude of discussion on this subject. No question of more importance has been submitted to the people of this state for many years, and it is the duty of every citizen to get all the information possible on the subject that he may cast his ballot intelligently."

THE FREE PRESS LETTER.

DETROIT, March 1, 1887.

MR. A. P. CODDINGTON, Tecumseh.

DEAR SIR: In the press of prohibition matter upon our space, we are compelled to decline your communication, and it is herewith returned as requested. Yours, &c.

THE DETROIT FREE PRESS.

MR. CODDINGTON'S LETTER.

EDITOR DETROIT FREE PRESS:

I have read with a great deal of interest the articles published in the Free Press from time to time, in regard to the Prohibitory Amendment, and the comments of the Free Press thereon.

It has pained me exceedingly to see that great, widely circulated and influential paper, the FREE PRESS, my daily reading for years, the recognized organ of the Democratic party in this state, arranging itself side by side with the saloon men, the drunkard, the gambler and the vicious and criminal of every class.

It does seem to me that the organ of this great party, composed as it is of all classes of men, ought to have had regard enough for the Christian and temperance portion of that party, not to violate their opinions and wishes in this manner. I have always been a Democrat because I believed the principles of the Democratic party to be honest and right and just. Many times have I had it charged to me that the Democratic party was a whisky party, and that as a party it was in favor of the saloon and the supporter of the liquor traffic. I have always denied and resented such a charge as an insult, and claimed that that party was as much temperance sentiment and morality in the party as in any other political party. I have never given them a party issue. Not is it a party question now. It is separate and independent from any party action, but you, Mr. Free Press, as the organ of the Democratic party, are endeavoring to make it such, and to commit the party to the saloon interest, and thereby prove that what our opponents have always charged upon us is true. If you succeed in this, and commit the party as such to the support of the saloon interest, and to the defeat of the prohibitory amendment, with all its legal and leading organs, how many of the thousands of good, true, honest, intelligent, Christian, temperance men, now in the party, will ever work or vote with it again? But, you say their loss will be more than counter balanced by those in favor of the liquor traffic coming to us. Oh yes, perhaps that may be so, but will you be proud of the party then, composed entirely of that element?

The liquor dealers, wholesale and retail, brewers, distillers, and all interested in the sale of intoxicating drink, oppose the amendment on the ground that it will destroy their business and ruin their property. You claim that you oppose it because "prohibition is a failure," and the passing of the amendment would mean more saloons and more drinking than now. One or the other of you must be wrong, as these statements cannot both be true. If you are right I would suppose that the liquor dealers would find it out, and go to work for the adoption of the amendment, instead of organizing for its defeat.

You claim that prohibition does not prevent, and that it is a failure. There is not intelligent arguing that question with you for every thoughtful, honest, thinking man or woman knows better, but it serves as an excuse for opposing the amendment to those who are ashamed of their action. You may ask, if this is such a failure, why are so many of the prohibitory states, whether prohibition is a failure or not, and such a question answer will indicate just what he is. If he is in favor of prohibition he will tell you that it is not a failure, but a great, glorious success. If he is not in favor of it he will tell you it is a failure, and if he was in the liquor business, he will add that it destroyed his business and ruined him.

If prohibition is a failure, why does the liquor interest of every class and shade, with all its devotees, and the drinking and criminal classes, all unite to a man in opposing any prohibitory law? Did you ever hear of a man who was in any way interested in the liquor traffic, advocating any prohibitory law of any kind? Do you think, sir, that any attempt at prohibitory legislation with all the means at their command, both at the polls and in the courts? If it is a failure why do they do this? If law breakers manage to sell liquor in violation of the law to such excess as to give no evidence that can be produced in court of their guilt, is it any evidence that the law is a failure? If so, then there is about their evidency that all our criminal law is a decided failure, as most, if not all, cases will show, from the number of arrests recorded, for not paying the tax, and the number selling on Sunday, and after hours at night, in the worst places in the city.

What do you propose to do? Will you please tell us what will better protect us, our sons and daughters, and our homes from the ravages of the saloon, producer of crime, poverty, wretchedness, and misery, than will a prohibitory law?

A. P. CODDINGTON.

Tecumseh, Feb. 26, 1887.

FARMER'S UNION CLUB.

Although roads and weather were unfavorable, about one hundred and twenty were present at the meeting of the Farmer's Union Club, held at Mr. H. J. Williams' Friday evening, March 11th.

After the literary part of the program which was well carried out, R. B. Eaton opened the discussion.

Mr. Eaton: Cattle as a general thing are thought to be leaders, although some prefer a fine horse or flock of sheep. We are obliged to compete with western markets and must have something to say about prices or we can not tell what our profit will be. Different men prefer different kinds of cattle, but the Shorthorns are generally considered the leader.

Mr. F. Davidson: It is hard to tell what stock is in the market at the best price. I prefer a good horse and think it less expense to keep horses than cattle.

Mr. B. VanNess: Hogs have paid me best the past year. If we all raised the same kind of stock it would not be profitable. It costs more to keep fine for animals than poor ones.

Mr. J. Dubes: I am a lover of good hogs as well as horses. I think the Poland Chinas are the best and bring the most money. I am in favor specialty farming.

Mr. E. Hendershot: I think farmers should keep a variety of stock, in good condition, then if the price of one kind rises we are ready to sell. I prefer the Shorthorn cattle.

Mr. W. F. Raymond: Sheep and cows pay me best. The stock a man keeps should depend on the soil. I prefer horses for cattle for we can get but little more for beeves than it costs to raise them.

Mr. Comfort: I find that taking stock to keep through the winter is profitable. I like good stock but think it expensive.

Mr. M. Davidson: Stock depends very much on the man keeping it. Have the best of whatever stock you keep, take good care of it and it will pay you better than if poorly kept. I consider a variety of stock necessary.

The next meeting will be at Mr. Ben VanNess's Friday evening, March 25th.

Twelve Reasons why the State should Pass the Constitutional Amendment.

1. It would effect an important reduction of taxes. The citizens pay millions more annually to the whisky shops than for all the expenses of the state government.

2. The whisky ring is a leech, fastening on every other trade and occupation, and itself producing nothing useful in return. The liquor tax in Maine is three cents annually on each member of the population, in license New Jersey it is $2.40.

3. Eight-tenths of the crimes committed in the State are produced by intoxicating beverages directly or indirectly, and the business which makes crime pays is well granted.

4. Science, by showing that alcohol has a special affinity for the brain, and that habits of drinking necessarily make drunkards, paupers and lunatics, demonstrates the right of government to enter upon the work of prevention by prohibitory legislation with the sale of intoxicating liquor as a beverage.

5. Prohibitory laws have stood for twenty-three consecutive years on the statute books of Maine, and have effected so much in the reduction of taxes and in the improvement of the government of cities and in the amelioration of the drinking customs of the people, that it is notorious that no political party in Maine dares now propose the repeal of prohibition.

6. Great cities are likely to rule the American Republic; they will also ruin it, if they are governed by the whisky ring, as they have been in a majority of cases thus far in our history. The predominant political influence of the whisky ring in great and corrupt cities is incompatible with the success of American institutions, or with safety to life and property under universal suffrage in mismanaged municipalities.

7. These facts being fully appreciated on the eastern seaboard of the United States, where the people suffered much from the mismanagement of cities, the most crowded part of the nation is anxiously watching every experiment with constitutional prohibition, and all friends of temperance and of social order wish it success.

8. Now is a most favorable time to work for Constitutional Prohibition. If all citizens opposed to the liquor traffic will do their duty the amendment can be carried in spite of the almost opposition of the whisky ring.

9. A constitutional amendment is superior to a prohibitory law for it is less easily repealed. A vote of the Legislature and a vote of people are required to pass or repeal an amendment. A prohibitory law would be the act of a legislature only, but an amendment is the act of the whole people of a state. Virginia is a precedent of permanence. Prohibition is expected by every friend of temperance, it is believed or apprehended by every friend of the whisky ring.

10. The Liquor Dealers' Circular, which we now oppose, the proposed amendment and they prove that the whisky ring [illegible] prohibitive.

11. The friends of religious education, of good morals, of law of the State officers, and it may fairly be claimed a large majority of the male voters of the State, to say nothing of the wives and mothers and minors, whose interests, among others, it is sought to protect, are in favor of the proposed amendment.

12. To prohibit one thing and except a second does not destroy the power of the Legislature to regulate the second, and so the exceptions named in the amendment as to the manufacture and sale of liquor for mechanical, medical, and sacramental purposes, are not loopholes. This opinion is supported by the most eminent legal authorities. Suppose that a law were passed that the people shall not be taxed to support private corporations, except railways. It would be absurd to say that the legislature would not have power, under such a law, to regulate taxation for railways. It would be almost to prevent, that if the legislature should tax the people for the support of one railway it must also tax them for the support of every railway that asks for such support. Precisely these absurdities belong to the claim that the exceptions in the proposed amendment are loopholes, or that they contained in it. The whisky ring has had good legal advice and fights the amendment because it knows that the proposed organic law contains no loopholes.

Another Train Wanted

Jackson people are endeavoring to get an extra train on the Branch. It will leave Adrian in the morning and return at night. Such a train would be a great convenience to towns on the line of the Branch, and we believe it would be well patronized. It would accommodate travel both directions, and especially south and west. The trains on the north make no connection now with western trains on the main line at Lawrence Junction, but only with night trains. Western bound passengers are compelled to hang around for several hours before catching a train. The same is true of passengers from the west, who wish to come up the Branch. A Tecumseh man wishing to go to Chicago, leaves Tecumseh at 4 o'clock P. M., waits in Adrian until ten in the evening and arrives in Chicago about seven the next morning. He can leave here at ten o'clock, go to Jackson, and thence via Central and get into Chicago just as easily. The Central road catches considerable travel from the Jackson road which properly belongs to the latter for this reason. A train should leave Adrian in the morning, immediately upon the arrival of the train from the west over the main line, or just before the main line reaches Adrian at ten o'clock. The extra passenger train would carry local travel very materially. The entire line of the Branch between Adrian and Manchester at the south end and between Manchester and Jackson at the north end. In addition to this, it would seem to be for a large amount of travel from main line to Chicago, that is attracted to the Michigan Central by one of the better connections there. The towns along the line should take hold of this matter and use their best efforts to secure such a train.

The semi-centennial of the Michigan University will be celebrated in June in connection with the commencement exercises. All former students are requested to send their addresses to J. H. Wade, Ann Arbor.

D. W. Aylworth, manager and treasurer of the Michigan Hedge Co., has removed the headquarters of that institution from Adrian to Kalamazoo. The removal is a loss to one place and a gain for the other, but Adrian can console herself with Mr. Aylworth's cyclone cellar which he left behind.—Det. Eve. News.

We have been overrun with communications and other amendment matter for the past month, and have been compelled to omit many articles that would have been published, had we more available space at our command. We must devote a portion of our space each week to other matter. Persons whose requests have been denied should bear this fact in mind.

Some one entered our office Tuesday, during our temporary absence and left a notice "House to rent" on the table. No signature was affixed to the notice and we endeavored to identify the handwriting without success. The person interested will please bear in mind that we decline anonymous advertisements as well as anonymous communications.

Tecumseh temperance workers were fortunate in their being able to secure three such distinguished speakers for addresses upon the submission of the amendment before April 4th. Prof. A. A. Hopkins, who speaks here March 18th, Geo. W. Bain, March 21st, and John B. Finch, March 24th, are all able and interesting platform lecturers. These meetings will be held in the opera house, are free to all, and those who attend them may be certain of hearing strong temperance addresses.

John B. Finch, of Nebraska, who speaks in the Tecumseh opera house on Thursday evening, March 24th, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. on the submission of the amendment, stands at the head of the order of Good Templars now numbering over 150,000 members. He has carefully studied every phase of the temperance question, and as a logical debater, he has no superior on the temperance platform. After having spoken seventy six times upon temperance in his own town, Lincoln, Nebraska, it is announced that Finch is to speak, no hall in the city will hold the crowd.

The fearful weather interfered somewhat with the attendance at the Union temperance meeting which was held at the Baptist church on Sunday evening. Rev. Adkins gave a lengthy discourse, bristling with facts and figures. At its close invitations were extended to the laymen, and A. H. Coddington, Dr. North and Dr. Geo. Ferguson responded in brief but very pertinent speeches. That was a good idea. Let us hear from the laymen. They should be called out and utilized at these meetings. Taken altogether it was one of the best meetings that has yet been held.

E. L. Hough returned from Ypsilanti Tuesday.

Miss Lola Howe visited friends in Clinton Friday.

Mrs. H. E. Stout is visiting friends in Battle Creek.

Fred Burlingame, of Kalamazoo, was in town this week.

Art. Burroughs, of Cherokee, Iowa, was in town last Friday.

Miss Grace Simmons is seriously ill with the whooping cough.

Orange blossoms in profusion will bloom in the near future.

H. W. Stevens and W. C. Jordan, started for Grand Rapids yesterday to attend the G. A. R. gathering in that city.

Rudolph Heesen started last week for an extended trip through the south, to extend the business of the Wolverine Hog Ringer.

On going to the barn last Monday morning Ben Reynolds discovered that he had one less horse to feed than usual, one having died during the night.

Pat Hendershot will commence his spring work with greater zeal than ever, the cause of which, is the advent of bouncing twins which arrived in his household Sunday morning.

When you see a tall silk hat coming towards you, don't for a moment think that a minstrel show has struck the town. Oh no, its only one of the fashionable young men of the city coming out in the latest spring style. Ah, there.

Our friend, Mat Root, is in luck. He has just received news of his promotion in the railway mail service. His run hereafter will be from Cleveland to Syracuse. Rumor also says that he is to be married to lay to a fair belle of Bay City. Here's good health.

Mrs. A. Wilson, whose mind has been deranged for some years past, and who has been living with her children three boys and two girls on Kilbuck street, became so troublesome lately that it was thought best to place her in an asylum, and accordingly she was taken to Kalamazoo Monday morning and placed in the insane asylum in that city. The little girls will be sent to a school in New York city, and the boys provided for in this vicinity.

The O. & M. Coal & M'fg. Co. have taken possession of their new office quarters on the corner of Shawnee and Railroad streets. The building has been completely remodeled and elegantly papered. It is divided into three rooms—a general reception room for business callers, a private office room, and a private director's room. The rooms are fitted out with neat and commodious office furniture and will afford excellent business quarters for this enterprising and growing industry.

The Masonic School of Instruction held in Tecumseh last Saturday, proved to be a very profitable and enjoyable occasion to the fraternity. Hon. Arthur M. Clark, of Lexington, conducted the drill, in which a large number of Masons both from Tecumseh and adjoining lodges participated. In the evening, the third degree was exemplified by Mr. Clark, and the exercises closed with a banquet. About fifty visiting brethren were present from neighboring lodges, mostly from Adrian, Clinton and Manchester. Mr. Clark is thoroughly posted in the secret work of the order and his visit here will give the Lodge an impetus, the beneficial effects of which will be felt for a long time.

The firm of N. M. Sutton & Co. has merged into what will be known as the Tecumseh Dry Goods Co. hereafter, with F. R. Otto as general manager. Mr. Otto has been hard at work for the past several weeks taking an inventory of the stock and putting it in shape and will add a large stock of goods bought under his own supervision, which his long experience in that line of business is a guarantee that it will be the very best. Mr. Otto is a live energetic business man and announces his intention as coming to stay and build up a trade, having made preparations to move his family to this village. The readers of the HERALD will do well to peruse their ad. on the opposite page, and to keep their eye on that space, as special bargains will be announced each week.

Mrs. Chas. Lawrence is visiting friends in Jackson, this week.

Frank Dickie, of Marshall, is visiting at G. D. Perry's this week.

Union temperance services will be held next Sunday evening at the Presbyterian church.

The Republican township caucus will be held early this year. It has been called for Tuesday evening, March 22d.

Jessie B. Coller, of Macon, has taken the agency for the Eclipse post hole digger, made in Springfield, Ohio, and the farmers should give him a call.

The Knights of Labor organization of this village was addressed by J. M. Bloomer, of Toledo, at their regular meeting last Thursday evening.

Young folks look at this! A social! Where? at Fred. Rosacrans. Oh my, what fun. Refreshments. Everybody invited. When? Next Wednesday evening, March 23.

As the report of the Tecumseh and Franklin Farmer's Club was more lengthy than usual this week, we are compelled to defer it until the next issue.

The managers of the Soldier's Home ask the legislature for an appropriation of $2000 for soap. Is the soap wanted for the old soldiers or to wash up the managers?

Since some Tecumseh man came over to Adrian, and a local tough mopped an alley with him, they have turned the Tecumseh rink into a gymnasium.—Adrian Times.

M. E. Cooklin is getting ready for his season's work early. His new rooms in the rear of Whitenack's hardware store are completed and he will have a sample machine set up this week. Farmers are invited to call in and see it. The machine has some improvements this year, and will be the best machine he has ever placed on the market or any one else.

Miss Libbie Robison left for Vineland this morning. She will visit friends in Cleveland for a day or two, en route, and expects to arrive at Vineland, in time to assume her duties in the postoffice there next Monday morning. She will be missed in the postoffice here, and the good wishes of a host of friends in Tecumseh will accompany her to her new location.

Special School Meeting

A special meeting of the legal voters of school district No. 7, in the township of Tecumseh called by the district board, will be held at the central school building, on Monday, March 28, 1887, at 7 o'clock p. m. for the purpose of considering the question of general repairs on the central school building and for the purpose of considering the question of new heating and ventilating apparatus for the central school building and for the purpose of taking such action as will give the district board authority to obtain the necessary funds in case either or both the above improvements are decided upon. L. G. NORTH, Director.

Tecumseh, March, 17, 1887.

"BUT SOME ARE FALLEN ASLEEP"

On Wednesday morning, February 23d, Mrs. Philo C. Mills quietly passed away.

She had been anxiously watching over her. Pneumonia conquered, left her in prostration, almost as alarming as the disease itself. Then came acute pleurisy. For days she was in great danger. Her friends were anxious and fearful. Her husband, children, and other relatives were hourly expecting the sad news. Yet she would rally, and for a time there would be hope. The disease would seem to yield to one remedy, but the next would find it in some new form, thus weaving into every day threads of hope and fear, until the frail sufferer could bear no more. The parents were passing the golden wedding with their daughter, Mrs. A. A. Dodge, of West Maumee street, and there the end came. Her husband, their five children, and other members of her family, surrounded the dying bed. Her mind was clear up to the last moment. The devotion of a lifetime culminated in a fervent prayer for each and all, and the loving messages that fell from her lips during those last hours will be a legacy of precious memories to those who remain. There was no fear, no dread, in all the scene. The waters were not cold or bitter. When strength was exhausted and voice had failed, she murmured, "My precious Saviour, my darling Saviour." Later on, with a last effort, she whispered, "Always remember mother." Good bye to all" and the brave, patient, faithful life of the "dear little mother" and the devoted wife was ended. Her sweet, Christian graces, her well balanced judgment, her gracious thoughtfulness for others, her quiet, refined dignity, and her unwavering faith in God, beautified and glorified her last hours and left a look of angelic peace on the dear face when she had fallen asleep.

Mrs. Mary Keeney Mills was born in New London, Connecticut, June 8, 1808. Her parents removed to Rome, New York, when she was six years of age, where she grew to womanhood, and for some years had charge of a select school in which some of our older citizens were pupils. On September 10th, 1834, she was married to Mr. Philo C. Mills, of Groveland, New York, a double ceremony uniting at the same time Dr. John Cadman and her sister, Nancy B. Keeney. The following year Mr. and Mrs. Mills removed to Michigan, and were among the pioneers of Lenawee county.—Many will remember the cheerfulness and bravery with which she endured the toil and hardship incident to pioneer life, and, side by side with her husband, shared all the burdens which led to comfort and prosperity. In 1853 they removed to Tecumseh, and rested from their life of toil. Her ambition, as she often expressed it, "to have a place in the world while she remained in it," was evinced in her social and church relations in that village. The time for election never came to her. Five years ago Mr. and Mrs. Mills came to Adrian, where they have occupied their own home, except when passing a portion of the winters with their children, that they might have less exposure and more [illegible] from the most severe enemy in the world, are the words we hear oftenest spoken of her whose earthly ministrations are ended. Her companion of fifty two years, left alone in the afternoon of his life, has the respect of his entire acquaintance, as he certainly has also their sincere sympathy in his great sorrow. Mrs. D. C. Blair, of Napoleon; A. W. Mills, Tecumseh; Mrs. D. A. Dodge, Mrs. H. M. Pomeroy, and E. L. Mills, of this city, are the children who mourn her loss. Mrs. Bixby, of this city, is a beloved sister.

Funeral Services were held on Saturday, February 26th, at 2 p. m. Notwithstanding the inclement weather, the house was filled with sympathizing friends. Services were conducted by Rev. W. K. Spencer, assisted by Rev. Mr. Babbitt of Tecumseh, of whose church Mr. and Mrs. Mills were members. Remarks were appropriate and comforting. Floral offerings were profuse. Music tenderly rendered by Mr. Moses Rice, Mr. Alf. Johnson, Miss Louise Mettler and Mrs. Chester Johnson, was fitting and beautiful. The pall bearers were Judge Tickles, Hon. W. S. Wilcox, J. R. Bennett, W. F. King, A. J. Hunter, and J. R. Northrup, several of these gentlemen being valued friends for many years.

Grand opening of New Home art embroidery exhibition, given by the New Home Sewing Machine company, at the machine rooms of B. J. Coller, opposite opera house, Adrian, March 18, 19, 21. No labor or expense has been spared to make this the largest, most complete and attractive collection of household draperies ever before on exhibition. It comprises all that is new and unique in raised and and arrasene embroideries, and is performed by methods that are entirely new. Heretofore difficult patterns in embroidery have been executed only by a slow and laborious process, but with our new and improved method a week's work is performed in a single day. The large collection of fancy needle work, in toilet sets, etc., will certainly prove interesting to you. Remember that this grand display is advertised at other cities and can positively not remain longer than the dates named, and that it is free to all.

In answer to the many letters received requesting a postponement on account of the bad roads I beg I wish to say that I will continue to take negatives until the 15th of April. I desire so to do lest the work I cannot pass by postponing any longer. F. H. Steger.

THE UNGLOVED HAND.

It occurred six years ago, in 1881, and [illegible]

How [illegible]

As well [illegible] knew.

A bright spring morning; the little pavilion at the end of the garden where Vladimir Dejnek pursued his art, sculpture, [illegible] the sunshine [illegible] than horrible his own disgust [illegible] his left hand [illegible] round mask above his throat, the half finished statue of Memory [illegible] the open casement and the garden, closed door.

[illegible]

[illegible] greatest and the upper [illegible] the mantlepiece [illegible] said [illegible] the [illegible] work.

The right hand was thin and artistic, slender and tapered, with long, slender and tapered fingers [illegible] the gray clay.

The left was the hand of a soldiers, with short, strong fingers [illegible]

[illegible] friends.

They had been as close in their relationship as intimacy may be, for together it seemed they had murdered Vladimir Dejnek.

To whom had these two hands belonged?

It was a useless question, which no one [illegible]

[illegible] hand like [illegible] was the hand of a woman, a small, soft, sensitive palm [illegible] the object it met to support [illegible] on her hasty route across the [illegible] and yet leaving its indelible [illegible] there.

[illegible] accomplice's hand—for [illegible] was taken for the [illegible] the strikers—[illegible] be that of a youth, terrified [illegible] of the crime, his strong [illegible] sank deeply into the statue of [illegible]

Had Vladimir Dejnek any enemies?

[illegible] that any one knew, but [illegible] young, ardent, impassioned artist may be not have enemies as well as [illegible] friends? Easily.

Did he have a [illegible]?

Oh, yes—love is not an idle word, it does the work [illegible] many not yet invented.

And was he loved?

True!

By whom?

Ah, who knows.

Had he a model?

Yes. She ceased coming a fortnight before.

And who was she?

Oh, well, a young, tall woman, wrapped always, even in this fine weather.

Did the statue resemble her?

Yes—ah! to be sure the face of Memory was a blank. It—it possibly not satisfied Vladimir Dejnek, and that very morning, very likely, he had obliterated it.

Could the model be found?

Nicholas, Paul and Katinka, the servants of the dead man, thought that she could.

Where?

At Virchow, of course.

Was she found?

Ah, no.

And was there any one else?

To be sure, the new model. How strange that they had not thought of her before!

And she?

Young, fair, fair, with eyes like the pansies, and long hair like the ripe silk of the corn, and a mouth as soft as fingers in the spring!

And her hands?

Well, well, that was too much. Nicholas, Paul and Katinka shook their heads and [illegible] their prayers.

Yes, yes, she had hands truly—because Katinka had seen Vladimir Dejnek's large, green, sparkling jewelled ring sparkling on the new model's finger, only the day before.

And where was she?

Oh, at Virchow, where else?

Was she found?

No.

Vladimir Dejnek's relations settled the affair, as a matter of course, and took possession of his property quite naturally, after spending many thousands of roubles in vain attempts to discover his murderers.

Not a trace of either women could be had, and presently Chevret Monplaisir echoed to the light laughter of the pretty cousin of the last heirs and the innocent prattle of her children.

The pavilion was torn down, and in its stead a leaping fountain played in the warm weather a jet high in the air.

The sculptor's tools were buried—and the unfinished, faceless statue of Memory.

Well, Vladimir Dejnek had a friend—Ivan Ansaldi. These two men had loved, each after his fashion, as men do once in a while, very deeply and tenderly, and Ivan Ansaldi, heir of the relatives of Vladimir Dejnek, [illegible] would give him the statue of Memory left unfinished in the studio.

The request was granted.

He took it away and had it locked and packed and glazed and kept it always covered with a long, dark cloth over it in the drawing-room of his apartment in Moscow.

And he swore, could he but ever meet or find the owner of either of those hands, he would avenge the death of Vladimir Dejnek.

* * * * * *

Ivan Ansaldi was the son of a southern father—he had passionate powers, capabilities, all of the most accomplished description.

He was a man of about forty years of age, a man of force and of intelligence, a little vain, but perhaps not too much so. He had had his successes, he had been loved in fact, he had had innumerable affairs of the heart.

And her—is a paradox: Amid all these affairs of the heart he had never sought without finding it—love!

He had fished two characters, with the one he amused himself by mocking the whole world, and with the other—well, he reserved the other, and very possibly consoled himself with the absurd idea that the day might come when he should show it entirely to some one.

Ivan Ansaldi had those melancholy, yet always smiling eyes, which forever seem to seek.

And what do they seek?

It is not for me to say.

He had traveled all over the earth looking always—for what?

Fame? Riches?

Heaven knows! And perhaps he himself, in the depths of his soul, knew also.

At least he was very well aware that he had never yet found that thing which he sought.

He thought often of his friend Vladimir Dejnek; the idea of vengeance slept within him, but did not die.

Even to-night, when just about to start for a ball at the English ambassador's, Ivan, brushing past the statue, pulled [illegible] cloth and stuck his forefinger into the [illegible] molded in the clay—and then with an oath he drew it out, and, drenching his hand in rancid cologne, left the room quickly.

It was a brilliant ball—this one to which he went.

When his restless, melancholy eyes rested upon her face they became happy. When his mocking lips spoke to her, kisses seemed to hover on their crimson fullness—and when he felt the silken sweep of her robes upon his sleeve his swarthy face became pale.

[illegible]

He did not attempt even to explain to himself. He said simply: "It is strange," at last, and he was very content.

Who, Roxandra Smirnoff, was hardly beautiful—she yet very young, being perhaps 30 and of that extreme fairness which seems to the casual thinker the idea of a pressure [illegible]

All, who knew better than Ivan Ansaldi, that it was the fire within her soul that had burned the face, the lips, the shoulders of Roxandra Smirnoff into such a transparency of whiteness? Who knew better than he the pale gold of her hair, and the paler blue of her large eyes, hid a volcano of sensitive feeling under their fair exterior?

Moreover, she was dressed in white with pearls and crystals and diamonds sparkling on her bosom and the upper parts of her arms—indeed, she looked like an icicle, as some one said.

Ivan heard them say it as they passed, he smiled.

"Madam, did you hear?"

"Yes," she answered.

"And"——

"Oh, to them, yes—'an icicle'—and one that they could never melt—but what do you think of me?"

"Too much to dare to utter it."

"Impossible."

"I assure you."——

"Will you then permit me to be your interpreter?" Roxandra Smirnoff says, with a little smile just breaking the frozen pink arch of her mouth.

Ivan bowed, looking at her with that comprehensive glance which a man never gives to but one woman in his lifetime.

"You are kind to permit it." The smile breaks into a little low ripple of cool laughter, more intoxicating to him who listened than would have been the most luscious mirth of the reddest lips of his own south land.

"Well—you think—here is a woman who has been loved, as brothers, friends, lover's love, by men of talent, strength—in brief, by men—and not to be loved in some fashion is for her a new sensation, from which she will not draw back—no—rather will she extend to this novelty the right hand of welcome; she is charmed with it! That is what you say to yourself, Ivan Ansaldi, and you are correct. I wish nothing so much as that you shall like me—not more than that—with that I am content."

"And I am not."

Mme. Smirnoff shrugs her snowy shoulders.

"No. Oh, by Heaven!" cries he under his breath. "What a woman you are!"

"What kind of woman, then, am I?"

"I do not know—I do not know—the kind of woman that is at once a man's inspiration and his despair—I can think of only two words of Dante's when I look at you."

"And those are?"

"The eternal pearl."

"You Italian and it of the mesh."

"Yes, and I borrow it for you—for, should sin dye you as deep a red as those roses yonder—should crime blacken you as similarly as look our starless nights—still you would to me shine forever white, immaculate, spotless, you puzzle, you irritate, you entrance me."

Roxandra Smirnoff shudders and Ivan stoops to gather her fur cape over her.

"Why did you think of that?"

"What?"

"Sin—and—crime?"

The music, a friend's voice, these things recall Ivan to an ordinary view of the situation.

"Ah," he says. "You must pardon me. To tell you the truth, I stumbled over a memento of a friend of mine who was murdered as I came out to-night, and it's influence must be haunting me."

"And should such mementos rise between you and me?" murmurs she in a voice whose melted musicalness was more like perfume to his senses than sound.

"Between us," corrects Ivan. "No—and yet, my countrymen are brutally superstitious, and I am one of them."

"How?" she asks dazedly.

"Well," Ivan Ansaldi leans over the high back of Mme. Smirnoff's chair, his arms folded, his eyes bent upon the fair face upturned to question his.

"Well, we love each other; that is the truth, is it not?"

"Yes," she breathes heavily under the velvet of her bodice.

"It is a great thing—it is the thing I have looked for all my life."

"And I," Roxandra murmurs.

"You fill my eyes, my soul, my senses, my heart and brain. I must tell it to you."

A little crimson color creeps into her parted lips, a little fleck of pink blood tinges the white of her cheek.

"And," Ivan says slowly and painfully, "there is something else that I must say to you also. Do not deny me, do not even look at me—it is fate, and with that it is best not to disagree. I say to you good-by."

He leaves her.

He leaves the house of his friend blindly, and, not stopping to enter a carriage, rushes across the city to his own house.

As he enters the drawing room the dark cloth covering the statue of Memory clings to his rough surtout. With a muttered exclamation he threw himself upon the lounge.

He vaguely heard the bells ring out the hours—two, three. He listened to a dog bark in the street, the dull sound of carriage wheels grating on the ice, voices, a bell, footsteps—some one without, some one admitted by a sleepy servant.

Ansaldi neither turned his head nor opened his eyes.

Presently he felt upon his brow a touch, cool as the fall of dew upon the parched earth.

He did not stir, save that a shudder of incalculable pain thrilled him from crown to heel.

"It is I!" murmurs the voice of Roxandra Smirnoff.

"I know it," he replies, still without moving.

"Shall aught come between us now—now, when for you I have risked everything? Answer me yes or no—do not move, and then I go—already I am here too long."

With a motion of exquisite deference, so tender as to be well nigh idolatrous, Ivan Ansaldi took into his the white hand of Roxandra Smirnoff and, rising, he raised it to his lips. A kiss softer and sweeter than incense he gave it, and then his eyes fell upon the ungloved hand of the woman he loved—her right hand——

With a cry of terror—a cry like that of a wounded wild beast—he sprang back and flung her from him.

"What is it? Ivan, what is it?" Roxandra Smirnoff stands erect in the glare of the many candles.

"What is it?" echoes the man. "Who are you? let me look at you."

He reaches forward and takes her head roughly between his palms.

"So you—" Ivan catches at her other hand and drops it with a motion of horror. "You are both of them!"

"What? what?"

[illegible] great drops from his face, and sank down on the sofa, burying his face out of sight.

"Oh, heavens!" cries she, "nothing can come between us now—what was it—that thought—again?"

"Yes," he replies simply.

"Tell me all about it, and that will end it."

"Yes. You are fanciful, superstitious, and I—I am here—and"——

"Yes. Very well"——

"Now tell me."

"To be sure. My friend—he was murdered, he was an artist, a sculptor, and they found him one morning strangled in his studio, no enemies, no theft, nothing but simply death. He had two models"——

"Yes," Roxandra Smirnoff pants as she listens.

"One of them a tall lady who had ceased coming a fortnight before his murder, the other beautiful, young, who was seen with him the day previous"——

"Yes?" she breathes heavily.

"Well, that is all."

"That is all?"

"Yes."

"And they never found out?"

"They never found out."

"Well, what do you think of it?"

"He was my friend."

"Ah—yes——" Well, of course, the young beautiful woman murdered him from jealousy of the tall woman—that is plain."

"You think so?" The eyeballs of Ivan Ansaldi, under his swollen lids, glittered like those of a shot tiger.

"Oh, yes."

"I do not."

He rose.

"Roxandra, I want to show you something—it is the memento of my dead friend, which I told you was a bad omen coming between my thoughts of you."

"Yes, show it me." She places within his her hand.

Ivan took it. With one stride he crossed the room; he tore the mask cloth from the faceless statue of Memory; he took the two hands of Roxandra Smirnoff and pushed them into the impressions they had made in that clay four years before.

They fitted exactly.

She drew them away, she looked at them—her two oddly different hands—she crouched and wavered, and sank, an incoherent heap, at his feet.

For a time—some seconds seem like eternities—there was no sound save the tinkle of the clock, and then in the hush there came the pitiful sound of a strong man's sobs.

She crept over to him where he sat, her long hair, tangled with displaced jewels, trailing about her.

"Well, you love me, Ivan Ansaldi?"

"Yes, yes, yes!" he answers stupidly.

"So did he, until she came and stole his heart from me; that was it."

"Hush!"

"Yes."

"What would give you happiness?"

"To be"——

"Well, yes—there, never mind, go home, go home."

"But"——

Ivan Ansaldi raised his eyes for the first time since she came into the room. They were full of blood and looked at her.

"You do not want to go yet?"

"No."

"Very well."

He staggered across the room and out of the door, and down the three staircases and out into the street and across it, and looking at the shadow of Roxandra Smirnoff at the candle lighted window of his own home, Ivan shot himself through the heart.

The murder of Vladimir Dejnek was avenged.—New York Mercury.

Lowell's Address at Chicago.

Not that he spoke ill. On the contrary, it was a genuine delight to listen to him. He did not "dosty" us, he did not mistake the chimney soot for the suitable in other things; he was not "litt'ry," and what he gave us was not "litratoor." He did not drop the final gs nor add an r to his idea of thinking—a self restraint in a Bostonian for which we are very grateful. It is very sweet to our ears, moreover, to find that he had not acquired cockneyisms nor other barbarities of English manners during the period when he imbibed more or less of English obtuseness in politics. But it was painfully apparent that either he spoke with singular indifference for a man to whom accuracy of enunciation should be an invulnerable habit, or with self contradictoriness indicating a defiance of orthoepic principles. For instance, he habitually said "natchah" for nature, and so on through the words ending in ure. He said "tempest" for tempest, and so on through the words ending in est. He generally said "munt" for the final "ment," and "ist" for the terminal "est." He was as little inclined to recognize an r between two vowels, or following a vowel and preceding another consonant, as is Mr. Cleveland to recognize a true blue Democrat when he finds an excuse in the civil service rules for not doing so.

In lieu of simple tears in one syllable he gave us afternoon "teahs" in two syllables, and Shakespeare himself came out anon with a final "ah." He did not lute us with his lute, but he did "lion" us with his lunacy, and although he sounded his n correctly in illusion, why should he have played loo with us when he became ludicrous? Shall he disavow for himself the trade he regretted Wordsworth had too much despised, "the trade in classic niceties?" and are not these two words, so widely different in usual significance, from the same root? Why, again, should he talk to us about patriotism, giving the a of the Latin root probably the true ancient sound, and then speak of "Socratease," anglicizing his Greek? It may seem petty thus to scan Mr. Lowell's spoken English "microbologically." But it must be remembered that it is one of the methods by which we must arrive at a correct pronunciation of our language, if such a thing be.—Chicago Cor. New York Sun.

The Jansenites of Judaism.

The Slavonic novelist, M. Sacher-Masoch, has recently given an interesting lecture to a Paris audience on the Jewish sects in Galicia, in the course of which he described the Karaites, who acknowledge only the first book of Moses as their religious guide. The Karaites, said the eminent Jewish author, are the Jansenites of Judaism. They base their beliefs on the love of the divine; they are virtuous for virtue's sake. Where reason and revelation agree, they say, we accept them as two excellent things, but where they disagree we must hold with revelation, for if reason had been sufficient revelations would have been superfluous.

The Karaites consider that it is not allowed to discuss the fundamental basis of revelation. Another of their precepts is: "If you cannot do that which you would like to do, you must be willing to do what you can." The life of the Karaites is very virtuous; they pray in Hebrew, with bent heads. In the east they never light a fire, and in Galicia, where the climate is more rigorous, they let Christians light it for them. The sect numbers about 40,000 in Galicia. One peculiarity by which they are distinguished from all other Jews is that they consider that commerce in goods which they themselves have not produced to be illicit, for which reason they are nearly all agriculturists or stewards. Until lately they were exempt from military service, but at present they are employed in the ambulances. M. Sacher-Masoch states, on the authority of a historian, that no Karaite has been condemned in any law court in Poland for the last four centuries.—Pall Mall Gazette.

When Talmage Wanted to Laugh.

Dr. Talmage told me the other day that he never suffered so much from the proprieties as once when he ought to have risen to make the opening prayer of a service, but could not do it on account of an overpowering desire to laugh. He was in a country church sitting alone on a little platform waiting for the minute when he should begin and gravely prepare his mind, when the door opened and a gentleman and two ladies entered. They were city people and they wanted that fact known. The ladies were very expensively dressed, but the man was a curiosity. He was apparelled with the care of a debutante at a White House ball. His eyebrows and mustache were dyed jet black, and his cheeks showed traces of powder and paint which his shape suggested stays. He [illegible] of a peacock on parade.

The ladies sat down and their escort flourished in after them and dropped himself between them on a bench. The bench broke. Then a stirring scene was enacted. The gentleman had fallen through to the floor and was caught between the splintered ends of the seat. He wriggled helplessly and lost his eyeglasses and cane and hat. The look of misery and fright on his face succeeding the proud dignity that had previously sat there was too much for Dr. Talmage. He wanted to get out into a ten acre field and whoop. He could not help laughing, and had to put his handkerchief up to his face and pretend that he had a very bad cough.—"Rambler" in Brooklyn Eagle.

Stealing Boulanger's New Explosive.

Gen. Boulanger has instituted a searching inquiry into a robbery of about a kilogramme of the new explosive melinite. The robbery was, it is stated, committed during the night of Feb. 8 at the powder magazine of Sevran, where the new explosive is kept in a special magazine. The workmen employed in the manufacture of the melinite are subject to the strictest of rules and are carefully searched before leaving their workshops, which, together with the magazines, are surrounded by a wall three meters in height. Notwithstanding all the precautions which have been taken, a guard employed inside the magazine to watch the stoves in which the powder prepared during the day is dried at night, thought he saw two men sneaking out of the magazine. Instead of running after them the man on duty in the magazine warned the guard outside. The soldiers and the gendarmes from Livry at once beat the country all round that magazine, in or near which no one was discovered, but the following morning it was perceived that the door of the special magazine in which the melinite is kept had been opened and that about a kilogramme of that explosive had been purloined.—London Standard.

"Coffee Coolers" in Battle.

A reporter asked Congressman Bragg what he meant by the expression "coffee cooler," used in his speech against the vetoed pension bill. "If you get Forbes' picture of the war," said Mr. Bragg, "you will see a picture of the regiments as they move into action. On the side of the road, under a cedar copse, there are three soldiers squatting down holding their coffee in cups, cooling it. And there they remain until after the battle and then rejoin their regiments. These fellows were features in every regiment, and I was surprised at the faithfulness of Forbes' delineation of these skulkers."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

TECUMSEH AND FRANKLIN FARMER'S CLUB.

With very muddy roads and the sky threatening rain, there was not a very large attendance of the members of the club at the residence of M. E. Conklin, March 9. The literary program was mostly impromptu, but good. The question for the evening, "How can we farm with the most profit and at the same time keep the fertility of the soil" was opened by Clem Bramble, as follows:

As Lowell says:

"The moral question's all's plain enough,
It's jes' the human natur side that's tough;
What's best to think mayn't puzzle me or you
The pinch comes in decidin wot to du."

That's true, "the pinch comes in deciding wot to du" to make the farm profitable, and at the same time increase the fertility of the soil. It is a question asked by every intelligent farmer and is of especial interest to us to-day, when the price of produce is so low.

The question for us is not what will pay for two or three years, but what will pay for an indefinite number of years. The latter part of the question is the first and great element of success in agriculture, since without fertility of soil careful cultivation is in vain

What will pay on one soil, will not on another, and different soils require different treatment. Again, a great deal depends upon the farmer. Hence I say the means of improvement of soil and pecuniary gain depends, in a great measure, upon the farmer and the soil he tills. For our average farm I would advocate mixed farming, and in order to succeed I would say to the farmer, know thyself and the soil you till.

"The time has come when crops are too uncertain and prices too low to risk a years income on one crop or one kind of stock. A good rule to follow is to have something to sell at all seasons of the year. The great advantage in mixed farming is in selling our produce as far as possible in the shape of cattle, sheep, hogs &c., thereby returning nearly four-fifths of the fertilizing properties extracted from the soil by crops on the farm. The animals in digesting their food, assimulate but little of the three essential elements of plant life, viz: nitrogen, phosphorous and potassium.

I do not believe in buying commercial fertilizers. I believe it unnecessary. Rather utilize the manures of the farm. Instead of throwing our stable manure into the yards to be leaching, rather make small sheds into which, throw the manure, and when a few loads have accumulated draw it out on the field you are to plow in the spring. I believe we can gain 50 per cent more profit from the manure than we do now.

There is another source of fertilizer which seems necessary to supplement barn-yard manure, viz: clover. It has more good properties than any other crop we raise. In order to make mixed farming profitable and increase the fertility, special attention should be paid to the rotation of crops. Clover as I have said, prepares the soil for grain, hence should be the starting point in the wheel of rotation, which should generally be corn, oats and wheat. A good rotation is corn, wheat and wheat.

Question, "Would it not be well to compost manure?" I do not think I would. Make it a rule to get it out and spread it as fast as made.

FAY DEPUY.

It does need much of an expert to see that the land in this section of country is plowed upon than it should be. We boast of our high priced land but what makes it high? It is because nature has endowed it with all the essential elements neccessary to produce large crops. Many farms in the east were once high priced and valuable, but have been sold in later years for about what the buildings cost, simply for the reason that the farmers raised too much grain and shipped it over to enrich that little dude of an Island called England. Eastern farmers buy our grain and lean stock that is shipped east, fat them, and are quite satisfied if they get their money back and have the manure left to put on their worn out soil. It would be foolhardy for us to pursue any such course, and the sooner we realize that our farms will wear out, unless we raise more grass and less wheat, the better it will be for us. The improved tools of to-day pulverize the land very fine, and it is damaged greatly by heavy rains when there is no sod to keep it from washing. We do not get as much money in a year raising stock as we do to raise grain and sell it, but we can make as much or more clear profit by saving the expense of hired help, board, wear and tear of costly teams and tools; also adding fertility to the soil instead of diminishing as with grain. Many farmers can't make sheep pay because they keep them to eat weeds, briars and thistles, and do work on the fallows that the cultivators ought to do. Give them plenty of good feed the year around, and with good care they will pay, and pay well. The same might be said of cattle. Thousands of head called stockers are shipped out of Michigan every year, at a loss to the farmers who raised them. If they were better cared for, and made fat before leaving the farm, they would leave a good profit. Our improved breeds of sheep, cattle and hogs can be fattened at most any age, and all surplus stock should be fattened in order to realize all there is in it.

H. Wilson. We let too much of the manure run off in the ditches. If we are to keep the manure in the yard it should be ditched so as to retain all of the liquids.

Frank Davidson. I think I can get the best results if I can draw out the manure in the spring before the ammonia begins to escape, and plow under as soon as spread. It is a mere waste to let a straw stack rot down in the field, for all the manure you will get can be carried out in a basket.

J. F. N. Bowen. I think that by using top dressing and getting a field nicely seeded we can keep up the fertility of the soil better than if we plow more.

W. H. Southworth. I covered about eight acres of a field with manure in winter on frozen ground and had good results.

TECUMSEH, THURSDAY, MAR. 5.

Postmaster General Vilas has told a friend that he adheres to his determination to decline a renomination. The people however would like to hear from the President's wife on this point. What is your opinion, Mrs. Cleveland?

The party organs on both sides are waxing hotter and hotter in their warfare on the amendment. The people however are in no mood to submit to any dictation on this point. They have taken the bits in their teeth and purpose voting the amendment up.

The Toledo Bee says: Time reverses some things. Massachusetts used to be as strongly a protective tariff State as Pennsylvania is to-day. Now a tariff reformer is received with enthusiasm by a Boston audience because of his tariff reform ideas, but Sam Randall, protectionist, can not go there and arouse the Bay Staters. They have changed their notions and are opposed to a tax that robs.

The prohibitory law is slowly but surely winding its coils about the traffic in Iowa. A telegram from Des Moines, under date of March 16th, says: The district court has issued a decree permanently closing the big distillery and stopping all manufacture. Yesterday a motion was argued before the supreme court for a suspension of the decree, pending an appeal to the supreme court.

A business men's meeting was held at Detroit Monday evening in opposition to the amendment. Voters in the interior of the state should not be frightened or misled by this new move. Detroit city is the largest beneficiary of the license law. This special tax helps the city over [illegible] annually, while the rest of the state pays its pro rata proportion in footing the bill.

Here is a new and sure cure for lovely girls. A young woman, in Kansas, was [illegible] her mother [illegible] for the strings but offered her [illegible] cents for every squirrel she would shoot. Diana took her shotgun and [illegible] the bills. She has cleaned [illegible] old lady into bankruptcy, but she is healthy as a woodman and hearty as a quarryman.—San Francisco Alta.

The Chicago Tribune, the leading Republican paper of the Northwest, hits the nail on the head in this fashion: If the Philadelphia monopolists throw out Randall, and thereby scatter his congressional followers, they will cut off their own noses clean down to the roots. For the good of the whole people, however, it would be a splendid thing, for then we might expect a cutting down of the old war taxes and some relief from their burdens.

Out of 132 bills vetoed by President Cleveland during the recent session of Congress only two were passed, notwithstanding the objections of the Executive. And with respect to one of these two final action was taken with the concurrence of the President in consequence of latter information received by him. The tribute to the care and justice with which President Cleveland considers acts of Congress is a striking one.—New York Star.

This is the way the Toledo Bee looks at the situation in Michigan. The probability is that prohibition will prevail in Michigan, not because a majority of the voters are prohibitionists, but because the anti-liquor advocates have outwitted the other fellows. The pronounced prohibitionists will vote the Republican ticket in return for Republican votes for the prohibiting amendment. By this sharp practice a very large vote will be secured, and as the Democrats and Greenbackers are quarreling among themselves there is every prospect for the success of the aggressive movement. Michigan has prospered splendidly under the license system, but the Kansas-Maine idea has struck the Wolverine squarely between the eyes, and he will be likely to fall in and march with the new procession after the April election. Then the crank reformer will swoop down on Ohio once more, and see what can be done with the Buckeyes.

A Lady's Unfortunate Experience,

Was that of one of our acquaintance who suffered from scrofula, a yellow complexion, and distress of the stomach for yers before using Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic, which finally cured her.

TEACHING JACK A TRICK.

The Story of an Amiable but Stubborn Irish Setter Victory at Last!

I heard a dog story the other day that should serve as a text in a reformatory sermon for some people as an argument in favor of educational discipline. The hero of this tale is an irresistible amiable enough but stubborn and immoderately wild setter. He never showed any special aptitude for anything except [illegible] and [illegible] his master's [illegible] and [illegible] a proper affection for the family with [illegible] he [illegible] with [illegible] maintenance. Not very long since a young relative of this family [illegible] to teach Jack a trick. He was a [illegible] dog, wasted, stubborn, or perhaps [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

—Lydia Hamilton Morris in Young's Companion.

BLUE OF BAR HARBOR.

The cause, life was to give a reception and review of the boats. He, Gaunard and letter I had been summoned to Mount Desert, to take part in the solemn rites of the occasion. The telegram was from the [illegible] announcing that it had been decided to promote and more show up. Now, I had never even heard there was such a club in existence and probably few men are more childlike in their ignorance of the paddle. The letter was from a young lady I knew well. Those name I had been pained to see mentioned in a newspaper as the "Belle of Bar Harbor."

If there is a being I hate it is a belle. What rudeness have I not suffered from the pert, intolerable little girls whose heads have been turned by that word! What indignities have I not been forced to smile at because long hair and a pretty face—or a trunk full of Worth dresses—or a clique of female relatives, have started the fashion of calling an otherwise harmless young woman a belle!

I knew this belle before, however, and never found her dull. She was a specimen of the rich complexioned women of Mobile, languid on the surface but full of energy when aroused. "After all, said I to myself, as I weighed her letter in my hand, she has done nothing to warrant the vulgar appellation, that I'll be bound, only, no matter how it may be hidden, the Mobile rose cannot stifle its perfume. She has been dubbed a belle in spite of herself. Then, looking at the warm words and the imperative orders that were couched in her peculiar long slanting characters, I felt it would not be in human nature to disobey.

Bar Harbor was just the same—a nature beautiful, solemn and marvelous in the act of being cheapened and degraded by a mob of townlings. The buckboards were toiling up the steep hills, yachts were coming and going in the harbor, all the sophomores from college in North America were escorting misses and missuses up and down the board walks or talking nonsense in groups on the broad piazzas of the most hideous of hotels. Surveying these with the jaundiced eyes of one who could not join in the game save for the briefest time, one more or less in love, I may as well confess, but who knew far too much to trust greatly to encouragements that ought to have meant everything, I was aware of Idita at the top of a long flight of steps talking to three boys and a man and managing to halloo to a fourth, who was hurrying down the street. It looked very much like a belle, I thought, but, sighing, I raised a sad hand of greeting all the same. Idita saw me, and, like Camilla, skimmed downward over the unbelieving steps as if she meant to fling herself into my arms.

"Glad, so glad you're here!" she panted. "Almost gave you up. Those three won't believe I'm engaged for the canoe review, and that man you passed has gone to prepare his boat for me. So you see you are just in time."

"But," said I, "it strikes me that I find you—a belle! and a bad case of belle."

"No more nonsense! Your canoe, our canoe, is all prepared and I have only half an hour to dress."

It was 10 in the morning and I surveyed her pretty costume with raised brows.

"Oh, this won't do. Now, don't be silly. Get into your rowing flannels and meet me just here!" And away she flew into the hotel with an audacious word or two right and left at her boyish admirers.

Among them was one who looked very hard at me, I thought, and I puzzled my brains to recall him. A very blonde head, blue eyes, a look of a much older man when you examined him, thin legs, well developed shoulders, a chin in the air and the back of the head considerably behind his heels—there he is, a funny mixture of strut and deprecation, of candor and insincerity. But his glance was sincere, if I knew anything—sincere in not liking me. Why not me? Of course, the obvious thing was that he was in love with Idita. But, I grumbled to myself, how is it that Idita, who is nice enough to warrant me in—well, in being very much attached to her, can support about her such wretched little idiots as this? That was what I could not understand, and gave the question up as insoluble.

Walking to the nicet I ventured to put it to Idita as gently as possible, at the same time that I begged that she would be equally candid. She certainly looked marvelously beautiful in the little Tam o' Shanter, with tassel of yellow silk, and the white flannel dress embroidered in the same manner. The coquette! She had the prettiest yellow Chinese clogs on her feet, and did not mind a bit rolling about a little on their small, rounded soles.

"Fact is, my dear boy, at a place like Bar Harbor it positively won't do for a girl to be seen without somebody talking to her. The mothers keep count and tell each other whether Kitty, Lucy, Maria has three men with her or one, or none, and somehow the consoling words addressed to the mother whose daughter is seen alone do not carry with them the comforts of Christian consolation. Now, that young man of whom you speak so disrespectfully is full of merit. He is very rich, to begin with, and sends me lovely flowers. Then he knows everybody. Then he has a tongue tipped with poison, and everybody fears it. Besides, he is a man of infinite taste—he admires me."

"More than he does me," said I.

"You don't say so!" cried Idita, whose animation at Bar Harbor came to me as a surprise, for in town she was rather languid. I attributed it to the bracing climate. "Does it work already? Now, isn't that nice of him to come to time at once?"

"See here," said I, a little savagely, and stopped to face her, "have you summoned me to this goose farm to play me off against that little gander?"

"Oh, you suspicious boy!" she answered, holding out her hand. "There, I forgive you; kiss it and return to your collar. For you are, remember, no less my slave here than you were last winter in town, and what I say must be done. Hear, obey, and it will be well for you."

"Pshaw! How long are you going to keep this up? Am I to see anything of you, or are the Tommy Moores and other things going to surround you in order that your mother shall be spared the trouble of her elderly [illegible]

My vanity came to the rescue just then, and suggested that she was giving me occasion to see her alone for on the rugged, desolate island there was less chance of interruptions than in or about Bar Harbor. So thinking, I cheered up visibly and Idita watched me with swift glances out of those circle eyes of hers and smiled softly to herself, humming now and then a tantalizing air that stopped short, like the song of the mocking bird, just when it seemed about to launch deeper into melody. Altogether, Idita presented an impish and tricky mood that day such as I never knew her to show before or since.

At the meet there was the usual confusion, calling, laughter, bumping of canoes, small shrieks from over excited girls, coming and going of the official boats. I was promptly boarded by Mrs Gaunt, who held me with a gimlet eye while she talked about Idita. In a few minutes I heard more names of men who had been, were or were about to be in a state of violent love with that young lady than my brain could possibly retain. Only one impressed himself by reason of picturesqueness. The youth, whose name I missed, had fallen headlong a slave to the cruel Mobilian, and had then and there retired to some fastness to brood on his hopeless passion and, so it appeared, his wrongs. For Idita had certainly snubbed him outrageously, if half what Mrs. Gaunt said was true. Another—the moral of it all—abided by me also. Is it necessary to state it? I, too, would promptly undergo like treatment at those little hands. I, too, would be encouraged, enjoyed, quarreled with, snubbed and brushed aside.

"But, my dear lady," said I, "in any event no mountain top or fastness in the wilds for me! No; if Idita—I mean Miss Idita—should be so harsh to an old, old friend, I would not go away where I could not see her, but stay right here—yes, and give her a good snub myself now and then!"

"I like to hear you talk like that," she answered compassionately, "because it insures to us poor wall flowers who have outgrown our youth and beauty another amusing episode in the unparalleled career of the belle of Bar Harbor."

The she devil had divined that I hated that expression. I ground my teeth so that she was frightened. She began to talk to somebody else, and fearing that I would tell Idita what she had said, set in circulation a story the point of which was that I could not be trusted for a moment so shocking a liar was I.

Longing to be off, I found Idita in earnest talk with Tommy Moore, who verily looked more like a crazy man than anything else, he was furious at my good luck and seemed to be saying violent things as I came up. It was fine to see Idita quiet and quell him, but my arrival was now opportune, to say the least, he flung himself away and walked to a grassy hillock overlooking the scene, where, I heard afterward, he rolled on the turf like a madman and uttered curses never heard before from those gentle lips.

But the signal was given and we embarked. I wonder how many of the men had ever been in a birch before. I hadn't. But I knew theoretically how to work the paddle, and was determined to die rather than let Idita see that I was what is vulgarly called a duffer. Fortunately that young lady was and is a round weight; she is not loveliness in its most ethereal aspect, so my canoe was well down in the water and easier to handle. Fortunately, also, the need of keeping the line made progression slow, so that I had nearly half an hour in which to take my first lesson. Once or twice I scattered the wrong kind of diamonds over that divine head, but Idita seemed too happy to care. Was she happy because at last I had come? Her eyes were fixed on Turtle island, and my own heart beat fast. Is she thinking of our agreement? I kept wondering.

We moved gayly and magnificently up the bay and down, then turned for the grand review with the addition to our ranks of several score of late comers. Among them was Tommy Moore, as I found to my dismay, for he jammed his canoe alongside mine and took a baleful pleasure in bothering me in every way he could. When he came in Idita's line of vision that charmer merely nodded to him lightly, as if nothing had happened out of the way—perhaps it was an everyday matter to her that a poor little society baby should roll on the ground and curse horribly on her account. I could not get rid of him till I bethought me of retaliation, and having by a skillful hoist under the stern of his canoe given Tommy very near to a ducking, that malign youth kept a more respectful distance, and only tried to "fascinate" Idita with his eyes and express with his nose what he thought of me and my vile paddling.

The joke was dull as we approached Turtle island again, so I slackened up and edged away to the farthest boat on the wing, deaf to the call of the commodore, and as the line moved abreast of the island I did my prettiest to get round the point to the other side, there to land—there to have Idita all to myself! Luckily, Tommy was wedged into the line so that he could not see the skulkers, and I flattered myself, as we forged over into the smooth water behind the point, that he had not detected our escape. How to get Idita out of the slippery canoe was the next thing that nearly turned my hair gray, but it was done well (though 'tis I who say it) at the expense of one of my feet soaked with salt water. To feel her hand on my shoulder, to have her weight fall on me when she sprang from the big rock, are mere matters of detail that recur to me just now with singular vividness. I know not why, unless we remember best the kindnesses that we receive just before the final breach.

But we walk over the narrow grass border and through the swinging wards of evergreens was a thing to remember for [illegible]

[illegible] would have been [illegible] for her to speak accord[illegible] Idita's [illegible] Idita [illegible] all to know [illegible] than [illegible] And yet [illegible] I knew her. Query of [illegible] was quickly singing to her [illegible] Sandark. She was to take [illegible] She was to change into a [illegible] dress. Her [illegible] lover [illegible] not be only in temper to those [illegible] Could it be her which I [illegible] to have [illegible] it? I crudely [illegible] before her [illegible] I had come here to get her [illegible] promise at least have it. The risk of a [illegible] was enormous just at that hour and at that conjunction. Now and then she would stop, look about her searchingly, and appear to be listening. We made for the steep side of the island overlooking the bay and the village in order to see the flotilla pass once more (thank God, without us!) before the admiral's caboc.

"Aren't you tired of all that?" asked I, nodding in the direction of Bar Harbor, as we seated ourselves under a stunted cedar where, unseen, we could note the whole bay. I had placed myself as near as I dared and played with the yellow silk tassel of the cap she had discarded.

"Eh? What? Bar Harbor? I think it is perfectly splendid!" cried this exasperating young person.

I nursed my knee and my thoughts. That abstraction was real, it was not assumed. At such a moment, in such a place, in the company of such a man, to be distrait was indeed a symptom not alarming merely, but crushing. My throat went rather dry, and I think I must have grunted a little, for she fixed her glorious eyes full of a liquid brown fire upon me, and asked it I felt ill.

"Yes," I said, snappishly. "I do feel ill. Talk to me, amuse me, sing to me! I have been paddling you about; you might at least do something in turn."

She straightened herself up from a lounging position and looked at me carefully.

"Why, you're as crazy as Tommy Moore!"

We both laughed, and then I entreated her to sing. From being perfectly inflexible, she suddenly consented, as if a thought had struck her, and presently one after another of the songs that young people troll at summer resorts peeled up among the cedars of Turtle island in an uncultivated but rich contralto. Suddenly she stopped short.

And over Tommy did go just as I spoke—only it was, rather, that his canoe got from under him and let him down. Like you or me in such a case he tried to climb on the bottom of the canoe, which thereupon got from under him just as cleverly as before; it is the way with canoes. This thing occurred five or six times before we realized that Tommy was very likely not to climb any more if help was not given. I scrambled down the hill, and had got half way when somebody dropped from a tree above, an outlying rock, his straw hat flying as he came, sprang into the water, had hold of life canoe, seized Tommy by the neck, and held him the other side of the overturned craft until he could get his breath. Then he began to haul and swim toward the shallow, and presently got Tommy into safety. It was done so quickly that my services were not needed. The man came from the sky, as it were—a deus ex Mackinaw, as Tommy afterward said, when the straw hat of his rescuer was fished out. Tommy always did make the worst puns when hysterical.

The sea at Mount Desert being icy cold, Idita and I set to work to make a fire at once, and called to the two sopping ones to come up. I noticed that, considering the danger there had been, Idita was strangely moved and lightheaded, but when the third man came up she evidently knew him. So did I. He was a long legged, very quiet chap from Maine, who never went into society, hated young ladies, had a rooted dislike of southerners, and regarded women who flirt as no better than traitors to their sex. We called him Billy Carr—what his middle name and family were I did not know—but except for prejudices of this kind he was as much liked, by those who knew him intimately, as any man I have met. Well, Billy Carr and Idita kept looking at each other in a curious way, and finally Tommy Moore spoke, rather hoarsely.

"Billy, you saved my life just now."

"Oh, that's all right."

"I ought to, I will tell you—right here before Miss Idita. I slandered you, Billy. I told her you were notoriously dissipated, that you never went anywhere because people wouldn't receive you. It was a lie, of course, but I did hear it said. I repeated what I heard, and didn't deny it. Will you forgive me, Billy?"

Carr held out his hand, but Idita burst into tears.

"I never, never will forgive you, Mr. M. M. Moore, never!" And she wept and sobbed as if her heart would break.

I tiptoed away, beckoning Tommy to follow, as the fire was now started and there was nothing else to do. We went down to the canoe in silence, in silence we paddled to Bar Harbor, in silence I took my tickets by the evening steamer to Frenchman's bay. I have always believed since that Mobile women are the most charming but the naughtiest creatures in the world.—Cats in New York Times.

Railroads Not Necessarily Ugly.

Why people fancy that a railroad must necessarily be an ugly object I never have discovered. There are railroads and railroads, a long, straight, raised embankment in a flat country is ugly, but a railroad in a mountainous country adds an additional charm to the view. Few things are more beautiful than a brick viaduct across a valley, unless it be the line of steam which issues from a locomotive and hangs in graceful curves along a hillside. Why they are deemed objectionable by asthetes, poets and such like persons is because they are associated with that utilitarianism which is hateful to their mooning, unpractical minds.—London Truth.

Cigars in the Year 1812.

The first cigar made in Connecticut was put up in 1812. At that time 75 cents per thousand was the price paid for their manufacture. They were rudely rolled by the women on the farms and were usually exchanged for groceries at the country stores.—Chicago Times.

DEMOCRACY AND PROHIBITION.

Can a Democrat support the pending prohibitory amendment, and still remain faithful to his party principles? This question was recently propounded to us by a staunch temperance Democrat, and we take this occasion to offer a few suggestions in answer.

First—The issue involved in the prohibitory amendment rises above the level of ordinary party politics. It is, to a certain extent, a political question that is true, for it requires the agency of the ballot to make it effective but it is more than that. It is also a religious and moral question. It involves private and public morality. It appeals to the higher instincts of man's nature. It should not be considered from a financial and utilitarian standpoint alone. It goes without saying that the best laws for the government of a free state are those which stimulate popular education and which foster habits of thrift economy and temperance among the people. He serves his party best who serves his country best. The wisest party man will seek to elevate the moral, as well as the political tone of the organization to which he belongs. Temperance and moral reforms are as necessary to the welfare of the state as financial reforms. The problem to be decided is not simply this: "How will this measure effect my pocket-book?" But rather this, "What is my duty as a citizen towards my fellow citizens? how may I protect the fathers, brothers and sons of the community from the ravages of a growing and enormous evil? how may I best promote the welfare of the Home, which is the foundation of all civilized society?" We maintain then that the loyal party man is doing his party infinitely more good than harm, by boldly enlisting with the army of reform in this crisis, by shouldering his musket and battling for the cause of justice and right and humanity.

Secondly—Again, the manner in which this amendment has been submitted places it outside of party lines. It is strictly non-partizan in character. No man is asked to vote for it because he is a Republican, or a Democrat, or a Greenbacker, or a Labor Unionist, or a Prohibitionist, but because he is a friend of temperance reform and is opposed to the dominating influence of the liquor traffic. It stands on the same platform with the salary amendment. Men of all parties will vote both for and against the increase of salaries, but however an elector may cast his ballot on either of these amendments, it will not and cannot be made a test of party loyalty. All Democrats can vote untrammelled for the excellent state ticket placed in nomination by our state convention. We can cast our suffrages for our own local tickets the same as usual. But on this important question we should neither be led astray by party sophistry nor driven astray by the party lash. All true blue temperance Democrats should stand shoulder to shoulder with the temperance men of other parties and vote the amendment up. Let us gather wisdom from our opponents. The liquor interests do not hesitate to enlist recruits from all quarters. They have raised an immense corruption fund and are using it freely. Every nook and corner of the state will be raked clean to gather votes against the amendment. The entire purchasable element will be utilized against it. Then let the friends of reform pool their minor political issues and pull together in its favor.

Thirdly—But viewing the subject in the light of party policy alone, we still maintain that the only consistent course for a temperance Democrat is to support the prohibitory amendment. Some one however may inquire "Is not the general trend of party sentiment in opposition to sumptuary laws? How do you reconcile this doctrine with your advocacy of prohibition?" This apparent inconsistency is very easily explained. What is a sumptuary law? Webster defines it as a "law regulating expense or expenditure, such as restrains or limits the expenses of citizens in apparel, food, furniture or the like." Vexatious laws of a petty character, which should attempt to regulate the expenses of every family in the matter of food, drink and apparel, would certainly be obnoxious to the citizens of a free state. But to call prohibition a sumptuary law in this sense is a misnomer. It is based upon an entirely different principle. It does not seek to limit or control any man's expenses. It does not say to the family or to the citizen: "You can spend so much for beer and no more." It attacks the traffic in toto on the ground that it is a public evil. It says to the seller "You shall not sell an article of merchandise which is making drunkards, ruining families, filling our jails and prisons, rearing a generation of criminals and paupers, and undermining the social fabric." Self defense is the first law of nature between man and man. Self preservation is the highest law of a free commonwealth. The state has a right [illegible] whatever shall have grown into such an evil, as to menace the welfare and stability of society, the state has both the legal and moral right to crush it out. Such a statute is not a sumptuary law in any fair sense of that term. Prohibitory laws of this character are as old as civilization itself. We find them enforced among the Hebrews, centuries before the Christian era. In the ancient Republic of Sparta, which [illegible] that age of the world, intemperance was exterminated by the most rigid laws. In Rome, a senator was branded with infamy for drunkenness. In Italy the vine was not cultivated until about 150 B. C. and for a woman to drink wine was a capital offense. Laws forbidding the sale of intoxicating drinks were instituted by Mohammed and have been rigidly enforced among the 180,000,000 of men who accept the Koran for upwards of 1000 years. Prohibition is a part of their religious creed.

Two applications of this principle outside of the liquor business, have been made very recently. The Michigan legislature has enacted a law abolishing the Bohemian oats traffic. That of Pennsylvania has passed a statute prohibiting the manufacture of Oleomargarine. No one will claim that the raising and selling of oats is a dishonest business. But when the Bohemian scheme developed into such magnitude as to become a huge public swindle, the state under its general police powers, saw fit to outlaw the traffic. Likewise the manufacture of bogus butter, if properly regulated, might not be an evil, but when it expands into a huge monopoly, and becomes a swindle upon the public which threatens to ruin an honest and legitimate industry, the state certainly possesses the right, in the exercise of its general police powers, to prohibit it.

Again, the fundamental principle lying at the foundation of Democratic polity, is this—that all legislation should be for the benefit of the people at large, and not for the benefit of privileged classes. Our political education has taught us to look with disfavor upon all forms of class legislation. Guided by this shibboleth the party action has been shaped upon all the great political issues which have divided the country, from the days when Thomas Jefferson, the founder of the party, achieved its first success, down to the time when the Sage of Greystone rallied its scattered forces, gathered within its lines the thinking progressive minds of the nation and thus laid the foundation for Grover Cleveland's election. Measured by this test, it has opposed the granting of huge tracts of land to railroad corporations; it has favored the forfeiture of unearned land grants heretofore made; it has enacted an inter state commerce law, and other anti-monopoly measures; it holds to the idea that the public offices belong to the people to be held as public trusts, and not used simply to reward political henchmen; it favors the enlarging of state and municipal powers, and the largest latitude of local self government for states, counties, towns and cities; it would restrict the powers of the national government within the narrowest limits, compatible with the public safety; it advocates a tariff for revenue only as against a tariff contrived for the purpose of enriching a few manufacturing monopolists by robbing the people at large; it advocates the reduction of war taxes and the strictest economy in all public expenditures; and it favors the poor man's silver dollar as well as the bondholder's dollar coined from gold. But we maintain that a liquor license law is the very quintessence of class legislation. Under this system a few mercenary men, upon the payment of a money license, are granted exclusive business privileges. They are permitted to carry on a traffic which degrades society, ruins our young men and brings want, wretchedness and woe into thousands of families. If the traffic be right, it should be free. If it be wrong, it should be abolished. Legitimate, honorable trade should be as free as possible. If the liquor business is beneficial to the community, let it be open to free competition. Do not grant the dealers exclusive and special privileges and thus enable them to build up fortunes at the expense of the rest of the people. And not only this, but the distribution of the license tax is equally unfair. It is gathered from the farmers as well as from the cities. The state taxes for the support of prisons, asylums and poor houses, made necessary by the liquor business, are paid by the farmers in pro rata proportion. But the farmers do not receive the benefit of the license tax, to the amount of a single dollar. The farmers pay about two-thirds of the taxes of the state. The revenue derived from the license system last year amounted to $1,186,366,95, nearly a million and a quarter of dollars, and this immense revenue is so diverted that not a dollar comes to their relief. In this matter the farmers of Michigan are enjoying the same blessed privilege imposed by King George on the American colonies, and which caused the revolution, the privilege of paying taxes and receiving no benefits therefrom. According to the Census of 1880 the population of the state was 1,636,000. Of these, 751,000, less than one third, lived in cities and incorporated villages. In other words, this tax benefits less than one third of the population, while a fraction over two thirds receive no share of it at all. If this be not class legislation of the most obnoxious character, we are at a loss to know how to designate it. "As a fair [illegible] amendment the total poll will probably reach 300,000. Of this aggregate the farmers will cast about 200,000. A practical unanimity on their part would bury license beyond the hope of resurrection. They hold the power in their own hands to rectify this monstrous wrong. There can be no doubt on that point. Will they possess the moral courage to exercise it. We shall see.

To sum up in conclusion, we submit that party policy, political consistency, and our duty as citizens all direct us to the same goal; to lend our voice and vote in behalf of this temperance reform. And when the smoke shall lift from the field of battle on the evening of election day, let it be recorded that the Democratic contingent stood in the fore front of the fight, and that to their valiant and faithful assistance was due, in a large measure, the Waterloo victory, which on that day the prohibition army is bound to win.

THOUGHTS ON THE AMENDMENT.

EDITOR OF HERALD:—Allow me through your valued Herald to express a few more thoughts on the amendment. My effort will be to show where rests the blame for certain legislative sins of the State and nation. That there are statutory enactments, demoralizing in their tendency and results, must be admitted. Let any who who may be in doubt read the critical examination of the liquor laws of Michigan by Prof. Steere of AnnArbor, as published in the Center, of March 3d., and it cannot be otherwise in any case where legal enactments result from a bad policy. Not that our Michigan liquor laws are any worse than are those of other States, for the policy of license in nearly all the States has for the last quarter of a century given character to all liquor laws. And the policy being bad the results must be always and inevitably bad.

In the first place we find that as a direct and unmistakable result of the liquor laws of the States and Nation enacted under the infamous policy of license, the consumption of intoxicating liquor is increasing at a rate equal to two and a third times the ratio of increase of the population of the country, and that those who are engaged in the traffic are getting away with hundreds of millions of dollars every year, which ought by right to go for food, furniture and clothing for the hundreds of thousands of homes being continually ruined and impoverished by this worse than useless consumption of liquid poison as a beverage. The traffic is coming to interfere more with the rights of all citizens every day in the year, than would the destruction of every drop of alcoholic liquor for beverage purposes in these United States.

All legislation for the regulation of the traffic by the policy of license is a failure. Such laws are unrighteous, fraught with evil continually, and the whole liquor business owes its very immensity, and wonderful growth during the last 25 years to that infamous "policy," sustained by the blind leaders of the blind voters of this country.

The "policy of license" as applied to the liquor traffic is the most infamous ever hatched by his Satanic majesty of the pit that is bottomless, and 150 years of unsuccessful experimenting with it demands its abandonment. The people are the nation, their will is law, and the agency through which they express that will and govern the nation is the ballot box. The voters are the sovereigns while bearing at the same time the responsibility for the righteous government of the nation.

The voter must bear the blame for bad laws and receive credit for good government, and every voter ought always to bear in mind it is just as infamous to go with the multitude to do evil as to go alone. The voters who cast their ballots for a continuance of the policy of license as against the principle of prohibition, must be held individually responsible for the multitudious evils of the traffic, although voting with millions of their fellow men for that continuance. And yet the devil has more than one system of legerdemain by which to beguile men into believing they can shift all responsibility to the shoulders of party managers or some unknown quantity. The act of voting upon this issue is more far-reaching in its effects upon the welfare of our fellow men than any most religious act. The act of voting is as sacred as any act an American citizen has to perform, for in reality, as well as in theory, upon the voter rests the responsibility for the righteous government of the nation.

It is a notorious fact however that in every community there are men who if they will not actually sell their vote for money, will refuse to go to the polls except in payment, for the day or a few days perhaps, and will then vote for any man or measure in whose interest they have been approached, although in direct opposition to their own convictions of right. And there can be no doubt that in [illegible] can be bought, either for drink or money, will be found voting "no" on the amendment. Neither is there any doubt as to the position of another class of men, honest hearted, and well meaning, yet both ignorant and foolish, if not actually and willingly so, who will be influenced to vote "no" fearing their "personal liberty" and "vested rights" might be interfered with by what the rum oligarchy term "Sumptuary laws." These men, wherever found, want to be shown by the amendment workers, that there is more devilish sumptuary law wrapped up in the liquor license, and tax laws, which are continually interfering with the most sacred rights of defenceless women and children, than could possibly be in a mandate to wipe off at one clean sweep, the whole accursed traffic from the face of the earth.

And then there are many good Christian souls with consciences bribed by the revenue, who will hold on to that fallacy with a death grip and vote "no" because they verily believe the traffic does afford a revenue, and does help to build new side walks and other public improvements. If the traffic does afford a revenue, who are the revenue collectors? Oh, the saloon men: 200 000 of the most disreputable fellows on the footstool who pay into the municipal treasuries of the people $160,000,000 annually, as license or tax fees, what for? For the privilege of collecting from the pockets of the people, in dimes and quarters, not only all those millions to reimburse themselves, but for the privelege of collecting at the same time, five times at least, as many more hundreds of millions from the pockets of the same blinded and deluded people, the dear indulgent people of this country, who are the victims of the most stupendous self-deception to which mankind ever lent themselves.

It is vain for men to talk of the benefits of the license system when we carefully survey the manufactured product of a traffic upheld by that system. Every penitentiary full of prisoners, every court full of criminals and every poor-house full of paupers, and every asylum and penal institution in the land filled to overflowing. Seventy-five per cent at least, of all these poor specimens of blasted and ruined manhood and womanhood, and all the army of tramps and scapegraces of the country, are the direct product of the open legalized saloon, which exists because of the legislative sins of the State and Nation, and for which the voters of the country are directly responsible. Shall the policy of license continue or shall the principle of prohibition prevail, and the people thereby secure to themselves protection against the dangers and damages arising from this most unhallowed and sinful legislation?

BIRTHDAY SURPRISE.

One of the most pleasant and enjoyable entertainments that I have had the pleasure of attending in a long time came off at the residence of Mr. Rector, on Thursday evening, April 7, it being a surprise party got up by the eldest daughter, in commemoration of her mother's fourth birthday, and when it was a grand succes, I think all will agree with me. There were about forty friends and relatives present and it was arranged that they should meet at seven o'clock sharp, and all were prompt on time and just as the family were sitting down to their evening meal. They were tied, when all made a rush for the house. Mrs. Rector answered the alarm at the door, and to say she was surprised would be putting it very mildly. Frank said she was beat and was willing to own it. I understand that all of the arrangements were gotten up by the daughter Eva. In order to have an opportunity to do the necessary work and hiding, she made arrangements with some of the neighbors to visit her father and mother to dine the two preceding days. After about an hour in social conversation an order came from our young hostess for father and mother to join her in the dining-room. On arriving at the spacious room, we found two tables the entire length of it, most tastefully arranged and laden with delicacies the most fastidious could wish for, and presided over by Miss Ella, assisted by her sisters Ida and Mattie and Kittie Griswold. After every man had been fully satisfied, and many ret red to the parlors, spent the time in social chat and music, until the lateness of the hour admonished us that it was time for people, at least, to be at home, and we departed with a wish that we might have the pleasure of many more such gatherings, and congratulating Mr. Rector on the success of her enterprise, and parents in having so valuable a trust committed to them on life's journey.

In response to the call of the President of the National W. C. T. U. and in harmony with other Unions all over our land, Tuesday, March 29th, will be observed as a Day of Prayer in this village. The meeting will be held in the basement of the M. E. church from 10 o'clock A. M. till 12 M., and from 1 o'clock P. M. till 4. Different leaders will have charge of the meeting each hour, and every man, woman and child who is a lover of home is invited to attend. All are requested to bring their Bibles and Gospel Hymn books and take a part in the meeting.

Mrs. Ed. Baird is visiting relatives in the village.

If you want an ancrim or a plush frame, call on S. P. Hosmer's. 1 4 off for the next 30 days.

As next Sabbath is review day, our usual Sunday School lesson is omitted this week.

Hugh Richards spent last Sunday and Monday among his old time acquaintances in Tecumseh. He is now engaged in the mining business and his family residence is in Milwaukee.

Mr. [illegible] "struck it rich" in his new venture.

The band visited Jerry Root's residence last Friday evening and favored Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Root with a serenade. They were invited in and the evening was passed most enjoyably by those concerned.

Mrs. Caroline B. Buell, Cor. Sec. of the National W. C. T. U. is expected to be in Tecumseh on Tuesday, March 29th. She will participate in the prayer meetings on that day and address a public meeting in the Opera House in the evening.

The Union services at the Presbyterian church last Sunday evening were largely attended. The church was filled, and a strong discourse was preached by Rev. Mr. Babbitt. Short addresses were also given by Messrs. A. W. Mills, P. S. McKinnon and Geo. S. Tiffany which made an excellent impression. It was the best meeting of the series thus far. Next Sunday evening the meeting will be held at the M. E. church.

Geo. W. Bain always draws a full house in Tecumseh. His meeting last Monday was no exception to the rule. The Opera House was literally packed, from the foot lights to the rear seat of the upper gallery, and Gen. Bain gave the audience the strongest temperance address that has been given in Tecumseh this spring. It was a magnificent crowd to talk to, and it was a "susceptible" crowd too, for the collection footed up over $55.00. Some excellent vocal music was furnished by the Presbyterian choir with Miss Jennie Root at the piano.

BARGAIN—The ownership of the W. P. Elmore portable Photograph Gallery, together with Back Grounds and many other accessories has passed into my hands, and will be sold or rented for a very reasonable cash consideration, or traded for other desirable property. Gallery is new and everything in first-class condition. An abundance of local patronage. No competition within ten miles. Only 3 miles to the popular Devils Lake pleasure resort, and a good opening for out door work. This is a bonanza for the right man. For further particulars call on or address A. J. Kempton, COURIER Office, Addison, Mich.

OBITUARY.

Geo. W. Totten died on Sunday morning, March 13th, at his home in Kalamazoo. On the Tuesday previous to his death, while attempting to adjust a belt at the Den Bleyker Manufacturing Co's works, the stick he used slipped from his hand and struck his left leg below his knee, inflecting a slight wound. He had been in poor health for some time and the injury seemed to give a severe shock to his nervous system. He became unconscious, and although he received the best treatment that medical skill could suggest, his constitution succumbed to the shock, and death ensued in five days. It was a severe shock to his family as no one could believe that such a slight injury would terminate fatally.

Mr. Totten was born at Verona, Oneida Co., N. Y., in May 1829. In 1846 he came to Michigan to reside permanently, locating at Tecumseh, and his home was in Tecumseh until his removal to Kalamazoo in 1880. In 1851 he was married to Miss Louise Woodard. He was a miller by occupation. During his residence here he found employment at different times in the flouring mills of the place, and he worked in two different mills after his removal to Kalamazoo. The deceased was one of our most respected citizens during his residence in Tecumseh, and he leaves a large circle of relatives and acquaintenances here who will learn of his demise with sincere regret.

The newspapers around the state are now writing witty paragraphs about another busted clew to the Crouch murder, having for a basis the decision of Prof. Stowell, of the university, that the spots on the clothing found in the stump, on Hutchins' farm, were not blood, but a fungus growth.

A bill has been introduced into the state legislature, making it the duty of all school boards in the state to own the books supplied to pupils in the public schools, the same to be paid for by general taxation. The plan has been in operation at East Saginaw for nearly two years, and is pronounced a success.

The Tecumseh skating rink has been turned into a gymnasium, and a full line of dumb bells, boxing gloves, parallel bars, trapeze outfits, etc., are in daily use. Tecumseh muscle is puffing up beautifully, and we soon expect to hear of a boxing match between Scove Stacy as their champion light weight, and a representative from some other gymnasium. Scove fences with a pencil at forty paces, but when he puts on boxing gloves he is right up where he can thump his antagonist from the belt to his cranium.—Adrian Press.

The inability of a newspaper to give entire satisfaction to all its readers is generally conceded, as is the feeble minded condition of the editor who attempts such a self-evident impossibility. In fact, it is impossible for an editor to please any one reader all the time. If there is any such reader in the United States, who is always pleased with everything he finds in his family paper, we do not hesitate to pronounce him inferior in intellect to the editor who expects to please everybody.

If country newspaper proprietors were to publish the names of the subscribers who take, read and enjoy, and are gratified by, yet refuse to pay for their home papers, the reputation of most communities for moral honesty would depreciate twenty per cent. An editor's labors are seldom esteemed or compensated. A lawyer will give you five minutes advice on one topic and charge you five dollars for it. An editor will give advice on a hundred different topics and charge you five cents a copy for his paper. And very often five cents given to an editor would save five dollars given to a lawyer. In fact no other business men are so universally robbed and swindled out of their labor and capital as the country newspaper publisher.—N. Y. Ledger.

MEMORIAL OF EZRA F. BLOOD.

It is with sadness we write a few lines in memory of our departed friend, Ezra F. Blood, of Tecumseh. His death was on the morning of February 15th, at his cherished home on the lands bought by him in the year 1824 for $1.25 an acre. He was born Oct. 28th, 1798, in Hillsboro county, N. H. He was a dutiful son at home until after 21 years of age, then his guiding star was westward. In York State he resided two years, then joined a party for the fertile lands of Michigan. Musgrave Evans was foreman and surveyor. He selected lands on the pleasant forest openings where the village of Tecumseh is now situated. Mr. Blood had the honor of holding the plow that turned the first soil of Lenawee county. The log house which was built on his land in 1826 is a standing monument of early times, with a beautiful and spacious farm residence near by. January 12th, 1830, he was married, at the residence of General J. W. Brown, to Alzina Blackmar. On the same evening, a number of cheerful friends escorted the married couple to their log house—the writer remembers the delightful and memorable time on that serene winter's night—the intelligent school teacher, then a bride, and the independent farmer the groom, for this was the first series of housekeeping. We are pleased to say for more than two generations of ordinary men, the heart of our friend has been a fountain of good and wholesome influence in this county. The author of all good has been gracious to him in long life with remarkable health and strength, his free step, erect form, clear face and genial smile, his eye not dim, his natural force not abated at the age of 89 years. Mr. Blood was modest and retiring in his deportment, yet few men were better known or more highly appreciated or more widely cherished by friends. His funeral was largely attended at the beautiful Presbyterian church, Rev. Mr. Babbitt, clergyman. A wife and four children mourn their loss of an always kind father. The rapidly lengthening roll of Tecumseh pioneers will add the name of E. F Blood, who is the last to leave us of that brave, undaunted band, who made their way into the wilderness, 24 miles from any road or any white inhabitant, in the year of 1824. It is eminently befitting to record the estimation of a friend and citizen when they leave for the silent tomb.

"[illegible] WACHTMEISTER."

"[illegible] said Mr. Harkness, [illegible] the letter [illegible] paper basket. He [illegible]

[illegible]

"Yes," said Mr. Harkness, [illegible] "I am." The young man replied with a marked German accent, and Mr. Harkness [illegible] he had in mind [illegible] the matter.

"All right, come in."

He opened a door leadingfrom the office and passed through it, followed closely by the young man. The door closed behind them, and the waiting clerks looked at each other with a smile of curiosity.

Mr. Harkness was like most of the bonanza kings of the Pacific coast. He [illegible] personal contact with [illegible] strangers. He was ready to [illegible] in which there was money, and in proportion in which money was involved was [illegible] for his consideration. He was young and already twenty years a millionaire. In his visitor he saw [illegible] of the German [illegible] of the Pacific coast. It would not be supposed from this, however, that he had suspected that this spectacled impecunious looking foreigner had made a complete inventory of his characteristics from merely seeing him in the street and from hearing the rumor of his daring maneuvers on the stock exchange.

"Well," Harkness remarked, "fire away. I've got just fifteen minutes."

"Half an hour," said the German, firmly.

"Well, fire away, man. Time at this hour of the day is worth a thousand dollars a minute."

"All right. Then I will be brief. My name is Herman Wachtmeister. I was two years ago tutor in chemistry at the university of Utrecht. In that capacity I was led to make certain experiments which resulted in my discovering what thousands have sought for in vain—the secret of making gold. You open your eyes, no doubt, in wonder. So did I. The gold was found in my possession, together with a number of metallic plates and instruments, which the stupid officials concluded were intended for counterfeiting. They would not believe my story, of course, that I made the gold. For counterfeiting I was accordingly tried and sentenced to two years' imprisonment. I have just now served out my sentence."

"You are a jailbird, then. It's a pity you didn't stay longer."

"Wait a moment and you will see."

Dr Wachtmeister here entered upon a detailed explanation of his chemical experiments, declaring that gold had never been proved to be an element, and that, if it was a compound, there was no reason why it should not be made. Science had solved many riddles in modern times which to the past were insoluble. He begged Mr. Harkness to grant him the privilege of proving to him and five of his friends, whom Mr. Harkness should himself appoint, that his statements were true. He asked for no salary or emoluments, but only desired to associate Mr. Harkness' renowned name with his own in the enterprise, which, if he carried it on alone, would expose him to fresh difficulties with the law. There was such a ring of sincerity and earnestness in his speech that the millionaire was more than half persuaded. He declared that he would let him know in a week whether he could grant his request, and instantly cabled to Utrecht to ascertain whether the story relating to the imprisonment and trial for counterfeiting were true. He received the next day a cablegram corroborating the story in all particulars. A second appointment was accordingly made, and the test in the presence of witnesses agreed upon. Wachtmeister begged as a favor that some of these might be scientific experts, whose judgment had weight. This, too, was readily conceded.

III.

The momentous day at last arrived. In Harkness' office half a dozen of the millionaire's dependents were gathered, all pledged to absolute secrecy, on the penalty of losing their patron's favor. Wachtmeister arrived at the appointed hour, carrying a starch box under his arm and followed by a boy who carried a small blast furnace about the size of a plumber's melting pot. He was introduced to each member of the company, among whom there was one who had been induced to personate the scientific expert. For Harkness, who like most men of his stamp, had small faith in scientists, had concluded that no such a one might readily steal the secret which he was now convinced was well worth stealing, and he had, for this reason, made, for the nonce, a professor of chemistry out of one of his clerks named Sawyer. Wachtmeister gamedly accepted this gentleman in conversation and measured in an instant the extent of his scientific acquirements.

The little introductory speech which he made I have not the space to repeat, but it was very clever.

"Now, gentlemen," he said in conclusion, "I must commit myself to your honor. I beg of you to examine carefully the contents of this box. You see that it contains some black sand—a very common article, which is found in abundance round about in the state. Here I hold in my hand a small bottle of sulphate of iron. * * * But, pardon me! I came near forgetting. I merely wish to convince you that my process is above board—without suspicion of fraud. You will not require of me that I shall explain it to you."

He thereupon stepped behind a screen and divested himself of all his clothes, which he handed out to the company, begging them to make sure that they contained no particle of the noble metal. One by one his garments were returned to him, then the furnace, the box and the bottles, each after having been subjected to a rigid examination. It was obvious that everything was fair and square. There was an almost solemn silence in the room while the alchemist labored behind the screen. Every insignificant little sound was listened to with excited interest. The crackling of flames was heard, and the steady blowing of the little bellows, then at last little cautious hammer blows, and before thirty minutes had elapsed Wachtmeister stepped forward holding a large bar of [illegible]

[illegible] cited oaths and exclamations greeted the gleam of the precious metal. Harkness seized it eagerly, scratched it with his knife, and satisfied himself that it was [illegible] passed it around until all had had a [illegible] it. The bar was [illegible] the assayer, with the explicit [illegible] assay, as the assay was found to be satisfactory. The bar being valued at $[illegible], Mr. Harkness and his guests [illegible]

[illegible] the exhibition of his skill was received [illegible] and all social problems solved [illegible] discovery. The conversation fell [illegible] turned chiefly upon the chances of bringing the production of gold so low as to cause a shock to the commercial world.

For three weeks Wachtmeister [illegible] steadily in a dingy little laboratory which he had improvised in an empty back room in the Harkness block. He [illegible] to the millionaire from time to time small bars of gold which the assay proved to be genuine. The millionaire grew greatly at being obliged to work under such disadvantages, with imperfect [illegible] and no facilities for experiment, [illegible] he dined almost daily with Harkness, who, as he came to know him, was more and more dazzled by his brilliant talk, scientific acquirements, and inexhaustible fund of anecdote.

"You be on the lookout, doctor," he said to him one evening as they sat sipping their Chartreuse and smoking half-a-dozen Havanas. "If you see anything that will suit you for a laboratory, you just let me know and I'll plank down the cash."

The Teuton betrayed no emotion at this proposal, but about a week later when there was a tremendous excitement on 'change at the prevention of a corner in Harkness's favorite stock, he rushed breathlessly into the latter's office with a copy of The Alta in his hand.

"Look there," he cried, "here is the very thing we want. For sale—The property of C. L. Perkins, Esq., at Oakland. I've just been out there and seen it. It has got the refusal of it at $12,000. They are about to close the bargain. Now, if we can offer $15,000 cash it's ours. It is dirt cheap, but Perkins has got squeezed on 'change and can't raise money in any other way for margins. He has got to have the cash by 2 o'clock. Now, if you'll run out there with me"——

"I run out there—are you crazy, man?" roared the millionaire. "Don't you know that there's something very much like a panic on 'change?"

"Why, no, I hadn't heard of it. Well, then, send out some agent of yours with your check for $15,000 or the right to draw on you for that amount."

"The deuce! I hadn't got no time to bother."

He scratched his head angrily, then drew a check for the required amount and handed it to Wachtmeister. "You run out and settle the thing yourself," he said. "I know the property. It is worth the money. I know, too, that Perkins is in a tight place. You'd better hurry."

"But couldn't you send Lawson along with me?"

"You just clear out. Do you suppose I can spare Lawson on a day like this?"

"All right. You'll hear from me to-morrow."

Wachtmeister folded the check, put it into his pocketbook and rushed out as breathlessly as he had come. It was the last time Mr. Harkness had the pleasure of gazing upon his countenance. He learned by chance the next day that the Oakland property had not been sold and that no bid had been made for it by his Teutonic protegé. But a man of $20,000,000 consoles himself easily.

"A smart chap," he said to himself, nodding approvingly. "On the whole it was not a bad investment. The mere experience was worth $45,000, with the fun thrown in."

IV.

It was in the early winter of 1882 that a visitor was announced to Miss Katchen Schrader. She gave a few decorative touches to her person before the mirror, rearranged her hair with a critical eye, and then burst with headlong ardor into the adjoining room and flung herself into the arms of her visitor. She became conscious, however, before regaining the perpendicular state, that his enthusiasm was scarcely equal to her own.

"Well, Max," she said, concealing her disappointment, "tell me the story of your adventures."

Instead of answering Max pulled from his pocket a package of papers which he unfolded and carefully spread out upon the table. They were United States bonds of the aggregate value of at least $50,000. Katchen's eyes grew big and radiant as she contemplated the possibilities of happiness contained in these prosaic figures.

"Oh, Max, my dear Max!" she cried delightedly, "you are a rich man. How I do love you! But tell me how you made so much money."

"I made my experiment in transgression."

"Yes, but how did you make it?"

"By the aid of my science."

"Now, don't be provoking! What did you do?"

"I asserted the power of an intellect, the value of which, for practical purposes, you had the kindness to question."

"Oh, I shall go mad, Max, if you don't tell me," exclaimed the girl. "Do have pity on me!"

"Very well, I will tell you, not because you deserve my confidence, but in order to prove to you that the poverty to which the devotee of science dooms himself is a voluntary one, and on that account sublime. The stricter moral law which Mr. Harbitsch and his like ignore with impunity, I, too, could ignore and be wealthy as they. To be a scoundrel and go to jail for it requires no great intellect, but to make a safe and profitable experiment in transgression is quite another thing."

The story was then told, a part of which we have already heard, how Max happened to cross in the steamer with a Dutch professor, who had served a two years' sentence for counterfeiting; how he had assumed his name after possessing himself of all the facts of his history, and in San Francisco successfully played the part of an alchemist. He had invested his paternal inheritance of about $3,000 in the experiment, had bought metallic gold, which he had reduced to a precipitate with sulphate of iron, and represented it in a finely divided state as a black sand, which an expert would readily have recognized as gold, but which would easily deceive men with no chemical knowledge. When he related the story of the check and the exactness with which, by his insight into human nature, he could predict the actions of a man and allay his suspicions, Katchen's eyes sparkled with amusement.

"Oh, Max, my dear Max," she ejaculated, laughing, "I never dreamed that you were so clever."

"But I," he responded with uncomfortable [illegible] being a great deal cleverer."

"What do you mean by that?"

"You seem to have forgotten that this was a mere experiment in transgression."

"Do you mean to say you won't keep the money?"

"I have already disgraced to Mr. Harbitsch information that the sum of $[illegible] will be paid on awaiting his order in the Imperial Bank of Germany."

"Oh, Max, you don't mean"——

The poor fellow's [illegible] was cut short by a vehement embrace.

[illegible] the telegram [illegible] his pocket and put them in his pocket. K[illegible] the paper and read [illegible] in [illegible] rough [illegible] paper. An amount of money equal to the order imperial bank. Was he [illegible]

"They will have no [illegible] at all."

"Yes," he replied with perfect gravity. "I have been saved from the mistake of sharing my life with one who despised my noble calling and was ready to wink at transgression."

Dr. Max Semmler made a profound bow and backed out of the door.—H. H. Boyesen in The Epoch.

All medical authorities agree that catarrh is no more or less than an inflammation of the lining membrane of the nasal air passages. Nasal catarrh and all catarrhal affections of the head are not diseases of the blood, and it is a serious mistake to treat them as such. No conscientious physician ever attempts to do so. It is held by eminent medical men that sooner or later a specific will be found for every disease from which humanity suffers. The facts justify us in assuming that for catarrh at least a positive cure already exists in Ely's Cream Balm.

The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off of revenue stamps from Proprietary Medicines, no doubt has largely benefited the consumers, as well as relieving the burden of home manufactures. Especially is this the case with Green's August Flower and Boschee's German Syrup, as the reduction of thirty-six cents per dozen, has been added to increase the size of the bottles containing these remedies thereby giving one-fifth more medicine in the 75 cent size. The August Flower for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, and the German Syrup for Cough and Lung troubles, have perhaps, the largest sale of any medicine in the world. The advantage of increased size of the bottles will be greatly appreciated by the sick and afflicted, in every town and village in civilized countries. Sample bottles for 10 cents remain the same size.

THE PEARL OF PEACE.

A bivalve feeding in the warm, salt sea
Draws inward with the wave a sandy grain,
Which, not returning with the wave again,
Day after day, so sea wise folk agree,
The creature hides it in a dew like rain
Of ceaseless tears, till, hardened out of pain,
A precious pearl is fashioned perfectly
From outer seas of passion, seas of strife.
There doffs at times upon the human coast
A secret, rankling grief that day by day
We cover with the bitter tears of life,
Till wrought of pain, from out our nobler part
The pearl of peace remains with us alway.

SOCIETY IN WASHINGTON.

What Col. Pat Donan Says About It.

Washington society is peculiar. It takes its tone from the White House, where all classes, colors, creeds and conditions meet upon a sort of level, however uneven it may be. The national mansion belongs to the people and they feel they have a right ... from high and low, rich and poor, white, black and pumpkin colored, dignitaries, exquisites and boors, sages, cranks, saints, sinners and rapscallions, punch knuckle-holes with their elbows in each other's sides and tread on each other's heels or trails. Cabinet officials, foreign ministers and blacklegs, supreme court judges and prize fighters, generals, admirals and corner grocers, senators, congressmen, lobbyists, peddlers and bootblacks, titled and brocaded dames and tatterdemalion crones, reigning belles and nameless women, Indian braves, pigtailed Chinese and nappy pated negroes, all crowd in motley procession to shake hands with the president and his wife, who owe their temporary greatness to the votes of the sovereign mob.

It is very democratic, very republican, very American. It gives to all capital society a free and easiness to be found nowhere else. It has its charms, but it has some drawbacks, too. The gushy local jenkinses have lately gone into hysterics of soft squash over young Mrs. Cleveland because she has discarded gloves on these omnium gatherum occasions, and meets all the legions of miscellaneous visitors "with a cordial clasp of her warm bare hands." My advice to her would be to wear sheet iron gauntlets or promptly add a liberal supply of mercurial ointment to her toilet equipage.

All official receptions are modeled on these chief magistratic affairs. They are open to nearly everybody, and a decent suit of clothes and a letter of introduction from some back county wirepuller to his senator or representative are generally enough to oil the hinges of more exclusive portals. This brings here hordes of nobodies, whose highest ambition is to be mentioned in a society report or newspaper paragraph as mixed up with the somebodies. The newly and vulgarly rich have flocked to a field where, what seems to them, social distinction is so cheap. Their pretentious mansions overlook the most aristocratic squares and circles. Their gorgeous turnouts, with gold tipped hubs and gold plated harness outflashing the sunlight, spin along the most fashionable avenues. Their epicurean free feeds draw throngs of well bred and well known feeders, and their blunders and absurdities are the laughing stock of the town that feasts at their expense.—P. Donan in Globe Democrat.

On the Verge of Insanity.

Meeting an old friend, a drummer, coming from one of the depots, satchel in hand, the other day, I greeted him cordially and asked him where he was from this time. He looked at me wearily and replied, "Arappy tap tap, rappy tap tap." "What's that you say?" says I. "Arappy tap tap, arappy tap tap, arappy tap tap," he replied. I really thought for a moment that he had gone crazy, but he slipped his arm through mine and said: "I can hardly remember where I have been. I can't think of anything but arappy tap tap, arappy tap tap—You see, unfortunately, about a year ago in one of my railroad journeys I noticed the singular fact that the noise made by the truck of a passenger coach in passing over the rails was always like the words arappy tap tap.

"I had never noticed it before, but I have never stopped noticing it since, and it has become very annoying to me. I have traveled on every railroad in every kind of passenger coach in this country, and wherever I go it is arappy tap tap. The only variation that I have discovered is that these sounds are loudest when the track is poorest and the speed the greatest, and that they are not heard at all when the track is good or the train is moving very slowly. I can't imagine what produces that regular succession of sounds. I have laid awake in my berth all night thinking about it. I do believe it will run me crazy." He turned off at the next corner, and as far as I could hear him he was saying "Arappy tap tap arappy tap tap, arappy tap tap."—Chicago Journal.

A Queer Dinner.

Eccentricity at the dinner table seems to be the rage this season. Any startling or unique innovation appears to be welcome. The fresh young man who cuts a human face on an orange and then squeezes the fruit until the eyes weep and the mouth drizzles is in his glory. If ladies are at the table he takes greater pleasure in exhibiting his artistic skill. A few smile, some give vent to exclamations and others preserve a dignified silence. Peeling an orange geometrically is another accomplishment. The yellow rind is cut in lines with a sharp penknife until it resembles the "prisoner's puzzle," just now attracting so much attention. The skin is then stripped from the fruit in sections making quaint angles, made amusing by the explanations accompanying them. The apple, the Malaga grape, the radish and the banana also afford much amusement in the hands of accomplished artists. Indeed, one man has won such eclat by his skill in carving vegetables and esculents that he is known in society as "Banana Bob."—New York Cor. Kansas City Times.

What Society Never Forgives.

A man can get all his other work done out for him; his painting, his sculpture, his music, his law, his finance, even his thinking he can get done out for him, pretty cheap, too. Mr. Bennett once said that nothing was so dirt cheap as brains. But he cannot get the conduct of life done out for him. If he prefers to lead an indolent and useless life, some fine day he will get up in the morning and find all society with its back turned, he runs the risk, he need hope for no quarter. Society never forgives the sins it has fostered.—Mrs. John Sherwood in New York World.

The beggars of Rome, it is estimated, receive $2,000,000 a year, and 500 are said to be worth from $15,000 to $25,000 each.

The two best rules for a system of rhetoric are, first, have something to say, and next, say it.—Emerson.

TEMPERANCE COLUMN.

Edited by a Committee of the W. C. T. U.

A Calm Word with Michigan Voters

April 4th, the citizens of Michigan will be called on to vote whether or not the liquor traffic shall be outlawed or shall continue to be a legal traffic, protected by the law as any other trade is protected. That they have the legal right to outlaw the business is beyond question. The Supreme Court has passed on that question and settled it. The States of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Iowa, Kansas, and Rhode Island have adopted constitutional amendments of legislative statute. That the citizens of Michigan can do so if they want to, make the selling of liquor unlawful in that State, is beyond all doubt.

Citizens of Michigan, you are asked to vote on this question as a moral question. You are asked to view it from the stand point of the church, not from the standpoint of a private individual. The man who consults his private likes or dislikes, and votes according to his own personal interests alone, is unworthy of the ballot.

We claim that every man should ask himself what is best for the community at large, when he casts his ballot as a citizen. A man may be a "moderate drinker," and I believe that he will never be harmed by liquor. But to that man as well as, to the total abstainer the question comes. Is Prohibition best for the State, best for the Commonwealth? And he is in duty bound to vote according to the answer to that question.

Every one knows what the evils of the liquor traffic are. There is no need of exaggerating them. They do not affect those only who indulge to excess; but they effect those who never touch the cup. Perhaps the heaviest burden falls upon those who are entirely innocent: the women and children. The taxes entailed on society by the drunkard fall upon drinkers and total abstainers alike. The evils are not limited, by any manner of means, to those who are to blame for them. It is well to bear this point in mind. Prohibition is not urged merely to save the drunkard from the results of his vice. It is urged to protect those who are innocent and who cannot be protected in any other way.

A prohibitory law is, after all, a very simple thing. It doesn't say, necessarily, that drinking a glass of wine is a sin. It does not pass judgement upon a man's private appetite. But it looks upon the liquor traffic as a public affair. It considers its effects upon the community. It sees those effects falling upon the innocent as well as the guilty: falling heavily upon all channels of trade: affecting disastrously the morals of the community: debauching politics and corrupting the individuals of whom the State is composed, and looking upon all these, it says the traffic is a public curse, whose right to existence cannot be defended.

You will be told, before the campain closes, that Prohibition doesn't prohibit. But does Prohibition of any public curse prohibit, in the sense of exterminating it? Does the law against gambling exterminate all gambling? Does the law against bribery end bribing forever? Does the law against thieving or killing put an end to either crime? It is not expected of any other law that it will entirely stop the evil it is aimed at; why should the law of Prohibition be pronounced a failure because it also may be disobeyed?

The proper question to ask is, Does Prohibition work a relief to the community sufficient to commend it where it has been tried fairly? Whose testimony is to be taken on this point, if not the testimony of those who have lived under the law? In 1884, after more than 30 years' trial of it, Maine voted three to one to put it into the State Constitution. Governor Martin, of Kansas, declares that State would give Prohibition to-day 100,000 majority, and Gov. Martin was not in favor of Prohibition when the law was first passed. Political leaders in Iowa say that State would to-day give Prohibition a majority of 60,000. Ex-Mayor Hillyer, of Atlanta, says the people of that city would as soon think of establishing Mormonism as of going back to the saloons. The chief of the State Police of Rhode Island says the arrests in the city of Providence have fallen off 42 per cent. in six months under Prohibition. If those who have tried Prohibition fairly pronounce in its favor in this way, is their testimony not to be taken as pretty nearly conclusive?

Another argument that will be made against the Amendment is that it will throw out of employment a large number of workmen, and thus bring financial disaster. But that argument is a false one, as proved in other States. Since the adoption of Prohibition in Atlanta, taxes have been reduced from 40 to 30 cents on $100. The prosperity in the State of Maine has increased mightily under Prohibition, according to the official figures showing the deposits in savings banks. Iowa and Kansas were never so prosperous as to-day. The fact is (and any one who studies the figures of the last Census Reports can verify it) that if the capital that is invested in the liquor traffic of Michigan to-day were diverted into other channels of industry, it would give employment to at least two and one half times as many men, and the business situation would be vastly improved all over the State.

THE MAN WHO VOTES TO MAKE THE SALOON LAWFUL IS AS SURELY RESPONSIBLE FOR THE CRIMES AND HEARTBREAKS CAUSED BY IT AS THE MAN WHO VOTES TO MAKE THE SALE OF LIQUOR LAWFUL IS RESPONSIBLE FOR ALL THE EVIL THAT MAY FOLLOW THE USE OF THE LIQUOR SO SOLD. WE ARE ASKED TO DO WHAT THE CITIZEN SAYS IT SHALL BE LAWFUL FOR HIM TO DO. We urge upon the men and women of Michigan to press that point upon the consciences of the voters. Whether opinions differ on this point or not, they are joint guilty, the bar-keeper and the voter for the saloon. The Voice.

Don't forget that Geo. W. Bain of Kentucky, speaks on the amendment at the M. E. church this week Saturday evening.

Owing to so much going on Friday night the attendance at the social was necessarily small, but those that were present enjoyed a very pleasant time.

Lulu Wilson of Morenci, is visiting friends in the village this week.

[illegible] and son John, of Ann Arbor, are the guests of Mrs. Ruth Waring this week.

The attendance on Sunday evening to hear Mrs. Benjamin on the Amendment was not nearly as large as would have been if it had not stormed. Mrs. Benjamin's address was very interesting.

Those of the choir that did not attend the rehearsal at Mrs. Wilson's on Saturday evening, missed a grand treat, at least on the part of refreshments.

The L. C. S. will give a maple sugar festival in the lecture room of the church next Wednesday evening, April 6th. The ladies will please furnish biscuit and pickles. By order of committee.

Ionia, Mich., March 23d, 1887, at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Noltv, by Rev. H. A. Pallister of Minn., Covert O. Miller of East Saginaw, to Josie F. Anderson of Ionia. Mr. Miller is an old friend of the Ridgeway people who extend their congratulations.

There was a fair turnout at the W. C. T. U. at Mrs A. J. Sutton's Tuesday evening. The next meeting will be at W. P. Cadmus', Tuesday evening. All are invited to attend.

After two months of a financial struggle that grand and glorious bird, the "Eagle," of which our Britton friends had so much hopes, and on which their future fame and success hung, very quietly got away and no one knows where he is to be found. It must have walked, for one of its wings is at Holloway and the other at our village, which are left without any main support. We always was of the opinion that the young Eagle had left its nest too soon after its pin feathers had started to make much of a success at quill flirting.

LAKE RIDGE LACONICS.

The prospects of the coming crop of wheat and clover are diminishing every day.

G. V. Osgood has made 14 gallons of maple syrup.

Abe Harrington has been fixing over the "old ranch" for a general store, by way of raising the ceiling, reshelving and painting inside, a new front, with large windows. He went to Toledo Saturday for a stock of goods.

Lewis Swick is in a very critical condition, from erysipelas, caused by a blow [illegible]

Fred. Hong and is suffering severely from rheumatism.

Sam. Stewart is moving from C. P. Morley's farm, to Mrs. Cheever's farm in Ridgeway, which he has rented for Noon & Beaubean have moved onto Abe. Harrington's farm.

Peter Swick is moving onto his farm, in the town of York.

C. H. Miller and Geo. Beaubean cut eleven cords of wood in five hours, last Monday.

Geo. Smith, having got through building for the present, is now going to tile his farm. He commenced about two weeks ago, is going to put in 6,000 this spring as a "starter."

The ladies of this township contemplate furnishing a free lunch for the voters on election day, as a token of their devotion to the prohibitory amendment.

Mrs. J. Stewart fell out of the buggy coming from Tecumseh Saturday, striking on her shoulder, and is quite indisposed.

L. C. Gradv, of Caro, is here in response to a telegram that his father, Thomas Grady, was very low from inflamation of the lungs. At this writing the old gentleman is a little better.

FARMERS PAY ALL THE TAXES.

Those who are reading the leading saloon journals of to-day, such as the Detroit Tribune, Free Press, and Evening News, the Adrian Times and Press, &c., will notice that they all claim: "as a last resort, farmers pay all the taxes: that out of the soil everything must come to create and sustain the cities, to pay their taxes and to feed, clothe and house their population. The city being only a depot, an agent, a middle-man, which handles and transforms the products which the labor of the farmer wrings from the soil. Before the farmer gets his price for his labor, the expense of this great depot must be taken out—the expense of its government as well the wages and profits of its laborers and merchants." Then in the next column they will claim that if the prohibitory amendment prevails, the taxes of the farmers will be increased to the amount of the present liquor tax—i. e. $250,000 annually in Wayne county. They prove too much. If farmers pay all the taxes as a last resort, they must of course pay the present liquor tax and vast income derived from the traffic, besides the [illegible] expenses resulting therefrom, in police, marshals, courts, witnesses, lawyers, jails, prisons, poorhouses, asylums and the varied other state institutions for which the present legislature has appropriated over one billion dollars, to the support of which will be levied in our next regular routine of annually increasing taxation. Yes, it is an alarming fact, that farmers, in the end, pay all the taxes. The expense of feeding, clothing and housing humanity, with the affluence, debauchery and crime incident to human events, are all taken from the raw material of the earth's productions. Every farmer and farm laborer should vote for the prohibitory amendment on the ground of curtailing expenses, thereby saving four or five times the amount of the liquor tax in the money passed over counters for drinks being diverted into legitimate business, and every voter of village or city (not engaged in the rum traffic) should also vote for the amendment as a rebuke to farmers who have a majority in the legislature for establishing and maintaining such a blighting curse in their midst, and as riddance from its damaging results.

NORTH EAST FRANKLIN.

Alonzo Marshall has bought Henry Brewster's farm.

Mrs. G. R. Knapp of Mount Pleasant is visiting her sister, Mrs. Munger.

Mary Cummins has engaged to teach in the Nichols district, near Wampler's Lake.

Levi Taylor of Liberty, drove out to visit his father and mother last week.

Will Witherell has moved back on his old place.

Mrs. Spaulding was called to Raisin on Monday of last week by the illness of her daughter, Mrs. Spencer. Will S., who accompanied his mother was taken sick while there, but got better and came home. He is a good deal "under the weather" yet.

On Friday evening there was a good turnout at the stone school house in the interest of the Prohibitory Amendment. Addresses were made by Rev. Mr Storms of Tipton and Rev. Mr. Williams from Clinton. Farmers are beginning to see that under the present laws they have to carry more than their share of the burdens of taxation. Perhaps those are wiser who have moved into town where they are getting [illegible] money's worth for every penny.

MACON MUSIC.

[illegible] was the guest of Charlie Hoke of Tecumseh, last week.

[illegible] is home on a short vacation.

H. D. Niblack was in Toledo the first of the week.

Annie and May Smith of Ridgeway, visited friends last week.

School commences next Monday, with Fred Sabin of North Adams and Maude Howell as teachers.

The Society of the Reformed church will meet at Mrs. Bell Kinder's, Wednesday afternoon, April 6th.

Mrs. Dr. Howell of Tecumseh, visited her daughter, Mrs. C. E. Triplet, last week.

Rev. John Maynard of Sparta, officiated at the funeral of David Hatch last Thursday.

Literary entertainment Friday evening.

Persis Rimerst, Helen Travis, and Sadie Jackson attended the examination at Adrian last Saturday.

Burt Ames of Ypsilanti, is the guest of his sister, Mrs. Niblack, this week.

Several men from Saline attended the shooting match last Thursday.

Sabbath School will be re organized at the M. E. church next Sunday morning.

ONSTED ODDS.

Mrs. James Newton leads in the chicken business, having some fine ones several weeks old.

Dave Corwin will commence getting out timber for Frank Skinner's barn this week.

Clarence Aten has moved from Napoleon to his fathers, here. He will build a house for house.f soon.

Rev. W. B. Pope and wife, of Clayton, have been visiting at Norris J. Morey's.

Bertha and Ray Shugar are visiting friends at Charlotte.

The Editor of the Adrian Press seems to have a grudge against some of the fleshy men of Onsted.

Frank Glenn of Chicago, has been making his parents a visit.

Martin Milton has been spending a week calling on his Morenci friends.

Fred. Daniels and Bliss Lee are both recovering from their illness.

R. Chapman and family arrived here from Tennessee, Saturday. Mrs. C. is a sister of John and William Hand.

Koster Morey has purchased of Warren Gilbert, the farm known as the Ira Ladd farm.

Mrs. Frank Aldrich, while driving and at the same time holding an umbrella, was capsized and the vehicle somewhat damaged. Fortunately for Mrs. Aldrich she escaped without injury.

Uncle William Onsted says he has two very fine Jersey cows which he purchased of Moteaf, of Adrian.

Grace Sandord, of Jackson, has been visiting Jessie Short.

Rev. O. F. Winton of Addison, spoke on the amendment at the church, last Friday evening, and Rev. W. B. Pope of Clayton, spoke on the same subject Monday night. Both men are fine speakers and should have had larger audiences.

HE HAD SALTRHEUM FOR 20 YEARS

A. Manvel, Ass't Supt A. P. Agt, C., R. I. & P. R. R. writes: "For Twenty Years I have been afflicted with Salt Rheum in a most serious form. During the winter season, my hands have been in such condition that I was unable to dress or undress myself without assistance, and I have not had gloves or bandages off my hands for about four months, until I began using Papillon's extract of flax Skin Cure. I certainly think it has cured my hands." Large bottles 50c.

A New York man recently dreamed that he was a Texas desperado in a town threatened by Indians and when he woke up he found that he had crawled under the bed.

"Shades of potatoes!" inquired Cauliflower, slightly disgusted after nineteen rounds of sour mash. "No, this is a butcher shop," replied the stoic nailing clerk, licking a fade one cent stamp. "Sho! Ish that sho? Well, give me a tender loin for my muzzer."

Prophylactic in Sickness.

Typhoid Fever has broken out here again, but wherever Darby's Prophylactic Fluid has been freely used there has been no fever.—M. B. Lancaster, P. M., Ed. Central Alabamian.

"The Fluid is not merely a deodorizer, but a disinfectant—a destroyer of the disease germs in an atmosphere which cannot be breathed without danger."—New York Evening Post.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSONS.

Lesson for April 3.

JOSEPH SOLD INTO EGYPT. GEN. XXXVII.

NOTES. "When Joseph was come unto his brethren." In obedience to his father's direction. The scholar must read the dreams of Joseph. His father's love for him, and their jealousy. "Coat of many colors." A coat very richly embroidered. Embroidery was one of the chief arts of ancient times. Garments were wholly covered with embroidery, so as in our richest tapestries, to cover completely the material. The colors were very rich. The designs are preserved in Assyrian sculpture, and are described in the Bible description of the Tabernacle curtains. A remarkable discovery has been made within five years of embroidered garments in which the dead of Egypt were buried in the earlier centuries after Christ. "The pit."—Apparently the water pit, although they were also dug for storing wheat. "A traveling company of Ishmaelites."—A Caravan of traders, moving in a long line, Indian fashion, in a single foot path, and the camels following one after another, and probably led by a man on a donkey. "Spicery and balm and myrrh."—Various gums, like gum tragacanth, used for odorous compositions and for embalming. They grew in Gilead and in the desert. "Judah said."—He had more compunction than the rest. Notice that it is the ancestor of David and Christ that spared his brothers life. "And there passed by Midianites, merchantmen."—In this passage many excellent commentators discover evidence that two or more stories of Joseph were worked together by the compiler of Genesis. "Twenty pieces of silver."—Not a full price for a slave in later times. Thirty pieces, or sheckels, was the fair price. The money was not coined, but weighed. "And Reuben . . . rent his clothes."—As the oldest son he felt a special responsibility for the welfare of the family. "They sent the coat."—By a servant, probably. "An evil beast."—Lions were not infrequent at that time, and hyenas, and bears, against which shepherds like these sons of Jacob, and David, had to defend their flocks and herds. "All his daughters."—But one daughter is mentioned—Dinah. Here, his daughters-in-law are meant. "I will go down to the grave."—Not the spot of earth where he should be buried, but the abode of disembodied spirits in the [illegible] ed in the future life, but their ideas of it were very vague, and they believed in a place of spirits called Sheol inhabited by strange ghostly forms, human and animal, and composite.

INSTRUCTION. Our lesson teaches the meanness of jealousy. His brethren hated Joseph because his father loved him and favored him. That is an exhibition of the merest selfishness. One is jealous because he loves himself more than he does others, and thinks an honor done another an injury to himself. If their father thought so much of Joseph they ought to have done so too. Older children should not feel slighted because love is given to a younger child. Love the baby too.

Jealousy is cruel. It kills. But that is the nature of all evil passions. They do not reach their natural result because of fear. He that hateth his brother is a murderer.

A very bad man can have a quiet conscience. Joseph's brethren could sit down to eat when they had left Joseph to starve to death. It is the good not the bad, that have tender consciences.

Judah had some conscience, but notice what a poor one. He would not on the whole quite kill his brother, but he would make a slave of him. He would let his father believe he was killed. How noble it would have been if he had withstood them and protected his brother, threatening to tell his father. He could have saved him.

Slavery is one of the oldest sins. It is based on the principle that might makes right. It is in criminality next to murder, for it seals the man himself and destroys all his rights. But it is a sin which the public conscience is very apt to fail utterly to recognize, so that even Christianity does not open the eyes of those brought up in it.

Think of a brother being worth only ten dollars. Think of Christ having been sold for fifteen dollars.

Joseph is a sort of type of Christ. He was hated and sold by the brethren, and thereby he became their redemption from an evil greater than famine.

The weather this week seems to indicate that winter simply let go to spit on her hands for a new hold.

THE TECUMSEH HERALD
Issued Every Thursday Morning
BY S. C. STACY.

TECUMSEH, THURSDAY, MAR

Michigan last year has in round numbers $[illegible]. If every liquor dealer in the state were to debate one tenth of his annual income it would raise a corruption fund of over one million dollars. It is this immense money power alone that will defeat the amendment, if it be defeated.

We believe the amendment will be defeated. But whether it is adopted or defeated, we hope the vote will be decisive one way or the other. The Times would like the matter settled, for at least a month. Adrian Times.

Here too. We believe the amendment will carry. But in either event we should like to take a rest during the changeable weather of April.

Why put the much-fought into the Constitution? The Legislature now has the power of enacting a prohibitory law. The object of the amendment is to give the measure the sanction of popular approval. If a majority of the people vote for it, no legislature will dare to violate their wishes by refusing to pass the necessary laws to make it effective.

Senator Colquitt of Georgia, is one of the ablest public men in the South, and one of the leading Democrats in that section. He is stumping Michigan for the prohibitory amendment, and is delivering some telling blows on that side of the question in some of our principal cities. Every Democrat ought to hear the eloquent Senator discuss this question.

Nearly every argument advanced by the enemies of prohibition is based on the theory that the law will be a dead letter. If they were convinced of this fact, why are they putting forth such superhuman exertions to defeat it? The truth is, they believe it will be enforced. The temperance men also believe it will be enforced. Then why should any one seriously doubt its enforcement.

It is a fair for the farmers to vote for a prohibitory law which the cities themselves do not want it. This argument is frequently advanced by the [illegible]. It is simply an indirect way of saying that the cities don't know enough to vote intelligently on the question, but should submit to the dictation of party leaders. The mercenary and purchasable vote however is not located in the rural districts. There is no class of men in the state who vote more intelligently than the farmers.

Ex-Senator Thurman of Ohio and ex-Governor Robinson of Massachusetts are men highly honored by their respective parties. Both of them called on the President the other day and had long interviews with him, and were subsequently asked what they thought about Mr. Cleveland. "He is an honest able man," said the Ohio Democrat. "The President is a strong honest man," said the Massachusetts Republican. "He means to do just right every time." It is evident to anybody who studies the drift of public opinion that this is the impression which Mr. Cleveland is making upon all candid men. Pittsburg Post.

There is a lesson in the Storey will case in Chicago. The case is no nearer a settlement than ever. The will has fought its way through four courts and now the highest tribunal in the state reads a lecture to the lawyers, and sets it back to where it started from. The only people who will reap any benefit from the magnificent property Walter F. Storey left will be those appointed to administer on it and the lawyers. Where is the lesson? It is that property should not be accumulated very far beyond the wants of the accumulator. In this is the only safety.—Adrian Times.

Ah! Bro. Applegate, this is sound advice, and we have noticed that the newspaper fraternity act on that theory with remarkable unanimity.

In the excitement attending the prohibition question, voters should not forget that there is another amendment to be submitted at the spring election which is entitled to their sympathy and suffrages. We allude to the one increasing the salaries of state officers. The laborer is worthy of his hire whether he be a governor or a hod-carrier. The salaries now paid to our state officials are niggardly in the extreme. The governor receives only $1000 the state treasurer the same, the secretary of state only $800. The state of Michigan is fairly out of her swaddling clothes now, and she can well afford to reward her official servants with an adequate compensation.

Indian Names in Wisconsin.

Our readers are aware that most of the [illegible] in the western and navigable streams have a tribal or tribe that for the sake of euphony or for instance, Pishtigo for [illegible]. We interviewed our old friend [illegible] the other day, who is well versed in Indian lore and was born here, [illegible] with the Indian language and Indians themselves and he gave us the following as the significations of some of the names of the places in this [illegible]:

[illegible] the yellow sand.

[illegible] the place of the pickerel.

[illegible] the place of the [illegible].

[illegible] the place where the Indians [illegible].

[illegible] the dwelling of the spirit [illegible].

[illegible] that the Indians [illegible] peculiarity of the [illegible] which some applied now. Most of the American names are utterly meaningless, as applied to the locality and we like the Indian [illegible].

For instance, Appleton, Seymour, New London, Dublin, etc., which convey no idea whatever. Believe it better, but it is French and is duplicated in other languages as for instance, Buena Vista, Spanish. Good stuff, it is good and contains idea.

The town perpetuates the name of an Indian chief, and Marinette that of an Indian woman and both are very good. Green Bay Intelligencer.

The Youth of Our Land.

There really ought to be some law against the sale of dime novels to young boys. Instances occur almost daily where the minds of young boys have become so distorted by reading trash that they are hardly responsible for their actions. A boy who reads about some account of the plain, wild cops and spends his coin and a book in lumber region but every day or some parade whose employers not enough blood every to make a hundred dollars worth of blood so sapp[illegible] in a diseased condition of mind and [illegible] body unfit for the solid work and [illegible] every day life.

He begins to manufacture pistols daggers, and other old junk and longs to run a pomard into some false Spanish and twist it around while he hisses through his set teeth some dread that he has read in a novel, such a boy will torture cats. Near Peru, in Illinois the other day a sheriff found a cave where a number of these boys whose minds had become inflated, had established a sort of pirate's glen. The potatoes were not at home being away probably on an expedition to capture a dark-eyed Spanish beauty, or a bantam of strength, beauty, and the sheriff entered the place and took an account of stock. All around were the sinister looking weapons of death and [illegible] and [illegible] of war and among them were twelve barrels [illegible]. This is an item which ought to teach boys that there is no such thing as realizing what novels tell about. There never was a novel yet that told about the dukes jaunting back and forth with a cloaked brow in the elegant drawing room of his castle and the young knight with beard and dabbing a dispute of lemon beer. Not any. The dukes always shame a chagrin of fine old Rhenish and the seven hundred years old, before he sets out to initiate a couple of knockdowns at home. A boy might to stay by this that if he is going to spend his [illegible] on the dime novels he will have to be [illegible] and Rhenish wine instead of lemon beer. And it would be the sun in Stoughton, [illegible] two townships of people with a [illegible] population of people. It would be [illegible]. And not only that but [illegible] [illegible] and just as [illegible] to say "Dry [illegible] the gas from the lemon beer should [illegible] in his nose." He would not like a [illegible] and [illegible] a novel, and [illegible] and wonder [illegible] exceed in [illegible] of [illegible]. No the boys to think who [illegible] the author of the novel, who is some poor [illegible] in a New York garret, who has starved home it [illegible] for money to buy [illegible] and [illegible] he would be astonished to be seen reading such stuff. The poor spoken [illegible] scribbler who writes about the [illegible] of the [illegible] value that [illegible] upon the [illegible] of the [illegible] is probably wasting a sheet of writing paper for a short [illegible]. Why Woolen Fabrics Shrink.

The fibers of wool and certain kinds of hair are toothed or jagged at the edges, the teeth or indentations pointing upward, that is from the root to the point. When subjected, therefore, to compression or friction, these fibers, being free to move only in one direction by reason of these asperities of surface, have a great tendency to unite and lock together. This explains the peculiar capability possessed by wool of felting, and also the shrinking of fabrics of wool. In the latter case, the excessive rubbing to which they are subjected causes a matting or binding together of the ultimate fibres which causes shrinkage, and this is intensified by changing the goods from hot to cold water, which is usually practiced as the contraction of the fibres which the causes a felting process. For washing woolen articles, it is recommended to place them in warm water, never in cold, and if changed from one water to another they should go from hot to better. They should be cleansed with as little and as gentle friction as possible. The fibers of cotton and linen are straight and smooth and possess none of the surface roughness that characterize the structure of wool, hence they do not shrink in washing.

Fourteen Wonders of the World.

The seven wonders of the world, in ancient times, were the pyramids of Egypt, the Pharos of Alexandria, the walls and hanging gardens of Babylon, the temple of Diana, the statue of the Olympic Jupiter, the Mausoleum of Artemesia, and the Colossus of Rhodes.

The seven wonders of the world in modern times are the printing press, the steam engine, the telegraph, the daguerreotype, the telephone, the phonograph, and the electric light.

The so-called "Seven Wonders" of the ancients were mere trifles compared with those of the present time. The Brooklyn bridge, for example, would make the hanging gardens of Babylon a mere toy, while the whole seven wonders put together would sink into insignificance could the builders have seen a lightning express train at full speed.

A NEW BUSINESS.

MONEY MADE BY SHOWING NOTA-

People Who Pay Half Dollars for a Sight of Wax Images Will Pay More for a Glimpse of the Originals.

[illegible] never better demonstrated than in the case of a young man who came to New York about a month ago to seek his fortune. His capital would hardly have been sufficient to pay a two months board bill. He answered [illegible] advertisements and [illegible] hope of seeing his name in print on an [illegible] in vain. He was [illegible] and finally was driven to consider some way by which he could [illegible] home, when he chanced to visit a place where there are images of some of the famous people of the country are on exhibition. There he saw [illegible] that has supplied him [illegible] business and which promises before long to be larger. He noticed how interested the people were as they viewed the images of Gen. Sherman, Col. Ingersoll and others more or less famous, when this thought struck him:

"If these people are willing to pay fifty cents to look at wax images they would certainly pay that or a larger amount to see the originals. Why, almost every day I could show them fifty men whose names are a household word by taking them to the corridors of the leading hotels."

He saw one party of gentlemen, evidently from the country, very much interested in the image of a man who can be seen almost any hour of the day in the corridor of the Fifth Avenue hotel. He made bold to ask them if they would like to have a number of flesh and blood distinguished men pointed out to them. They were delighted with the idea, and immediately started off with him to visit the hotel corridors. The young westerner had traveled considerably, so that he knew a number of prominent faces. He was extremely fortunate this day in meeting a number of distinguished men, and when he got through with his party was liberally rewarded. This inspired him with confidence in the practicability of his scheme and he resolved to make a business of it.

The next day he had cards printed stating the nature of his business and went at it in a methodical manner. At first he looked for his customers from among the people who visit the place where the wax images are exhibited and among the second class hotels. His business now is fairly well known among the hotel employes, and it is not infrequent for customers to come to him.

HOW CUSTOMERS ARE SECURED.

"I am now making a good deal more than I could as a clerk," said the young man "and, besides, I think there is a good future for me in this business. I have not opened an office yet, but I expect to before long. It is certainly a very interesting vocation, but it has to be worked in a systematic manner. Like all other businesses. You can only find men around the hotels in the morning and evening so that during the middle of the day I spend my time looking up custom. The morning though is decidedly the best time to find notables. You can usually find fifty to [illegible] persons of national reputation in the hour's walk through the corridors. A good time to see theatrical people gathered about cabs is in the after[illegible]

"There are a lot of prominent men who know my business, and are generally around at certain hours so that I may be able to point them out. There is a distinguished congressman at the Hoffman house who goes regularly every morning and evening for my customers. I find [illegible] long ago there was a prominent United states senator stopping at one of the hotels and some one made him aware of the fact that I was exhibiting him to several customers. Shortly after the senator entrapped me in a conversation and begin to inquire about what my customers had seen and thought about him. Their remarks had been complimentary so I told the senator what had been said. He was delighted and gave me $5 for my trouble. He also told me confidentially that whenever I had customers in the hotel and he should not be around I might send for him and he would, as a matter of accommodation to me, respond.

"The theatrical people generally are an excellent advertisement for themselves, and many of them are very glad to have me introduce them to my customers. The fact that I have the entree into nearly all the theatres shows best how they appreciate my services. For a business of only a month, I think I have done well, but this is only in its infancy. In the fall I expect I will have two or three assistants. Of course as I prosper I expect opposition.—Washington Post.

The Austrian Succession.

Although the Crown Prince of Austria has now been now of some six years he still remains without issue, and it is hoped that little or no hope remains of his wishes in this respect being fulfilled. Should he die without leaving a son the imperial crown of Austria would pass to the present emperor's brother, the Archduke Otto Ludwig. According to [illegible] succession to London the eldest son of the latter, the Archduke Otto, who only a few months ago was married to Princess [illegible] of Saxony, has behaved so shamefully to his young wife that she has been forced to leave Lula and to return to her [illegible] who are [illegible] at her [illegible]. It appears that the young archduke [illegible] of a [illegible] alteration that his condition is being [illegible] to a [illegible] incident [illegible]. It is stated that the [illegible] family, namely, [illegible] who is resident in the late [illegible] and who is [illegible] the present [illegible] [illegible] the government has developed with increased [illegible] in the young [illegible] which [illegible] to [illegible] the [illegible] of his dishonorable [illegible]. Restored Her Youth

Mrs. Phoebe Chesley, Peterson, Clay Co., Iowa, tells the following remarkable story, the truth of which is vouched for by the residents of the town: I am 73 years old, have been troubled with kidney complaint and dropsy for many years, could not stoop my self without help. Now I am free from all pain and soreness, and now able to do all my own housework and owe my thanks to Electric Bitters. I feel like a new woman, having renewed my youth, and have overcome all disease. Try a bottle, only 50c. at C. A. Wright & Co.'s.

Sore Eyes

The eyes are always in sympathy with the body, and afford an excellent index of its condition. When the eyes become weak, and the lids inflamed and sore, it is all evidence that the system has become disordered by Scrofula, for which Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best known remedy.

Scrofula, which produced a painful inflammation in my eyes, caused me much suffering for a number of years. By the advice of a physician I commenced taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After using this medicine a short time I was completely

For a number of years I was troubled with a humor in my eyes, and was unable to obtain any relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine has effected a complete cure, and I believe it to be the best of Blood purifiers.—C. F. Upton, Spencer, N. H.

From childhood and until with a few months, I have been afflicted with Weak and Sore Eyes. I have used for these complaints, with beneficial results, Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and consider it a [illegible] Glover, Vt.

I suffered for a year with inflammation in my left eye. Three knots formed on the ball, depriving me of sight, and causing great pain. After trying many other remedies to no purpose, I was finally induced to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla. [illegible] three bottles of this medicine I have been entirely cured. My sight has been restored, and there is no sign of inflammation [illegible].—Kendal P. Jones, Sugar Tree Ridge, O.

My daughter, ten years old, was afflicted with Scrofulous Sore Eyes. During the last two years she had scarcely any kind. Physicians of the highest standing exerted their skill, but with no permanent success. On the recommendation of a friend I purchased a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which my daughter commenced taking. Before she had used the third bottle her sight was restored. Her health is completely [illegible].—W. E. Sutherland, Evangelist, Shelby City, Ky.

A Tale of the Rocky Mountains

BY MAX MARX.

half way, and here now I am, [illegible] the southwest and down among the ranches of the Platte, half way [illegible] worn, my food gone, [illegible] hand. Night in Colorado [illegible] cold!

I wrapped my [illegible] my shoulders and [illegible] through the pass [illegible]

"Curse my luck! [illegible] for Black Dan's [illegible] by the stage in coming. [illegible] 40 brave men [illegible] would be [illegible] beyond [illegible]

[illegible] Sam, has the [illegible] dark. These days [illegible] lungs [illegible] coughs, if I reach [illegible]

"Behold, Charley! [illegible] speak, and whistled [illegible] St. Bernard.

[illegible] cold for that, I guess."

I was returning from [illegible] desperadoes wanted in the [illegible]

The cut-throats had [illegible] ing camps about Leadville [illegible] been a long one. [illegible] last, however, and the prize of [illegible] with them. I was about to return and make arrangements for their arrest when by some unknown means they learned who I was, and I fled. Fled perhaps to the wrath of the worst man between Cimarron and Denver. Black Dan. Had he found me, my life would not have been worth a toss of a card. I must reach the settlements quickly, and return with a posse in order to capture my [illegible] and that without delay.

In the gloaming of the morning I had begun my perilous horseback journey; in the gloaming of the evening I was continuing it. No soul had met me along the lone trail and I believed that I had [illegible]

The blackness of the canyon crept up, the narrow trail was frozen, and among great masses of boulders across patches of snow, and again along the bare earth. I followed with watchful eye the indistinct path until, just at the verge of the last [illegible] that should carry me into the [illegible] gulch I halted a moment to rest my weary horse.

"Only a little further, Charley," said I, dismounting and patting his drooping head; "a couple of miles more, and we'll strike supper and a bed. You've done a deal, old boy, saved me."

A sudden fierce growl from my dog, as he sprang toward the shadow of the pines behind me, a single lance of light, a ringing report, and without a moan I threw my hands quivering into the air, whirled heavily away from my horse and fell. Black Dan had found me.

* * * *

Slowly, and with great pain, consciousness returned—consciousness, for my brain was still alive, but not personally, for of my body I knew nothing.

What had happened?

Laboriously my mind traveled through the midst of death that still surrounded it. Slowly one idea followed another until at last came the knowledge that I sought. I had been waylaid and shot.

Yes, I remember now. Remembered the cry of my dog, the ring of a rifle, the sheet of flame, the blow of the ball, and then—nothingness.

I had been shot and was dead.

And yet not dead, for pain revived, and dead men feel no pain. I was shot but not dead. And so came at last the consciousness of matter. I still lived.

I sought to rise, but could not, for I was bound, bound hands and feet, arms, legs, body, neck and head, fingers, lips and eyelids even, bound, yet not with cords.

Where was I? What was the trouble? Nearer and still nearer came the truth as knowledge of myself, nearer and still nearer, until with a mighty effort, throwing off all lethargy, I made one desperate attempt to rise; but the damp weight of newly-turned earth pressed upon my heart, the clinging bands of newly dug earth and one, and with a wild cry of horror and despair I recognized my situation—I was buried alive.

I did not faint at first—life was too dear—but lay simply deadened, crushed by the blow, the loose mould admitting air for my respiration, my poor stunned brain rolling these words up and down: "Buried alive! Buried alive!" until from sheer madness and loss of desire knowledge fled a second time.

And then it was the tongue of my dog that awakened me. Don dug me out and lapped me back to life again.

As the dull gray of the winter's morning dawned, with groans I dragged my stiffened limbs from my narrow bed, and crept painfully down the trail toward the [illegible], the blood oozing from a hole in my [illegible], my eyes wild and fierce, my heart [illegible] my life half gone.

As I thought, Black Dan, [illegible] must have followed and ambushed me, [illegible] supposing me slain, he had the grace to bury me. It was owing to his haste or carelessness that my dog had been able to paw the loose dirt from my grave, and save me.

If I could reach Johnston's ranch I might live; if not, I had been saved but to die a second time, for a fierce storm was brewing along the mountain tops above my head. My horse was gone, my rifle, pistol, knife, gone; only the dog remained, and faithful to the last, followed as I slowly and painfully trod the descending trail in the direction of the river.

Suddenly amid a wild roar of wind and creaking of trees and whirl of freezing snow, the storm burst, and in its fury swept me from my feet, and rolled me, crying and shouting, far down the canyon side, until a great boulder caught and held me.

Then it raged on.

Fierce and relentless the wind tore through the forest, pitiless and cold the snow fell, and except I had dragged my broken and bruised body into a crevasse of the ledge, I had died where I lay. Then even blacker than ever fell the storm and raged unceasingly through all the gloomy hours of the day, until night came a second time to cast its pall on the scene. And as the darkness crept up from the east my dog, who all the day had laid at my feet, deserted me, speeding away through the shadow and snow. I was alone.

And so faint, wounded, cold, departing as the moments grew life the longer, and when at last midnight broke my lamp went out. Again I lay unconscious.

All night the gale continued, and not until the dawn of the second day did it cease, when the newly-fallen snow lay deep and white over all.

Within the deep crevesse of the rock, sheltered from the cold white death, and yet beneath it, I lay motionless. Above me [illegible] shroud so thick [illegible] to my tomb [illegible] sleep [illegible] the dregs of the world [illegible] the [illegible] of matter [illegible] opened [illegible]

[illegible] they took not only the stone and the snow which my tongue cried out against, [illegible] I was entombed and [illegible] relentless than [illegible] hands more stern and [illegible] Fate and the stones of [illegible] mountain combined against me. [illegible] a second time, but now with death [illegible] companion.

[illegible] that I could not escape, and they [illegible] though I expected it. [illegible] There was no struggle, no moaning [illegible] I gave up to kindness and [illegible]

[illegible] I was dying, slowly the [illegible] Sam has the [illegible] dark. These days [illegible] lungs [illegible] coughs, if I reach [illegible]

The sceptical Mr. Bradlaugh was once lecturing in a village in the north of England, and at the close challenged discussion. Who should accept the challenge but an old Irish woman, in the most antiquated attire, who went up to the lecturer and said: "Sir, I have a question to put to you." "Well, my good woman, what is it?" "Ten years ago," she said, "I was left a widow, with eight children unprovided for, and nothing to call my own but this Bible. By its direction, and looking up to God for strength, I have been enabled to feed myself and family. I am now tottering to the grave; but I am perfectly happy, because I look forward to a life of immortality with Jesus in heaven. That's what my religion has done for me. What has your way of thinking done for you?" "Well, my good lady," rejoined the lecturer, "I don't want to disturb your comfort; but" "Oh! that's not the question," interposed the woman; "keep to the point, sir. What has your way of thinking done for you?" The infidel endeavored to shirk the matter again, the feeling of the meeting gave vent in uproarious applause, and Mr. Bradlaugh had to go away discomfitted by an old woman. The Lutheran.

Pedigree of Maud S.

The remarkable trotting speed of a mare in 2:10¾, made by Mr. W. H. Vanderbilt's six year old mare Maud S., at the Chicago Trotting Park, leads one naturally to look into the character of her ancestors, in order to account for her wonderful performance. Her sire was Harold, son of Lexington and Hambletonian and Enchantress by old Abdallah. Her dam was Helen Russel by Pilot, jun. of Pacing Pilot; her third dam was Mary Russel, by Thornton's Eaglebird. It will thus be seen that Maud S. is from fast stock and a good record might be expected of her. Her legs and feet are faultless in form, and apparently of quality that will stand up under any amount of use, and judging from her actions on the track she is as faultless in disposition as in conformation. This simply shows that breeding will tell, and that there is a great deal in pedigree, if made with some definite end in view. Like in kind, like like.

A Feminine Defender of Tobacco.

An advocate of the use of tobacco in support of his stand uncorks an article written by Margaret, Duchess of Newcastle, some two hundred years ago. In defense of this seductive weed that lady wrote: "It composes the mind, it busies the thoughts, it attracts all unwieldy objects to the mind's view, it settles and retentes the senses, it cheers the understanding, strengthens the judgment, spies out errors, it exasperates foolish, it heats sanguine, it comforts sorrow, it abates passion, it excites to noble actions, it digests conceptions, it creates fancies, it quickens wit, and it makes reason plender and truth judge in all disputes or controversies between right and wrong."

Missed the Train.

It was a colored man. His back was all dirt, one tail of his coat was gone, and every button had been ripped off his vest. He had two lumps and a black as he came out, and there was a new French shade of sadness in his voice as he toed the mark and said:

"I missed de train, sah."

"Yes, it looks like it. Is your name Gen. Scott Green?"

"Yes, sah."

"What train did you miss?"

"I doan' jyst remember what train it was."

"Whar was you going?"

"Down the road."

"What road?"

"Dat's what I [illegible] sah."

"Well do you remember of getting on a drunk?"

"No, sah. Maybe I called fur lemonade in dey gin me whisky, but I doan' zackly member it. All I recollect is dat I missed de train."

"I think you got the train all right. You were training around pretty lively when the officer got hold of your collar."

"I allus walks in my sleep, sah."

"Well, that's bad for you. You broke a window, kicked in a door, and raised a big row. Have you observed the state of your wardrobe?"

"I has deserved dat I m all broke up, sah. Dis suit ob close cost me seben dollars cash, an' I doan' believe it would sell fur six. Did dey roll me down stairs?"

"No; you resisted arrest and the officer had to mop you around a little."

"He did? I wish I'd bin dar to seen de fun. Kin I step out an' see my partner bout two minuts?"

"No, sir; you can step up to the workhouse for sixty days."

"Shoo! Why, dat upsets me from gwine to Butlerjer."

"Can't help that. Please fall back."

"Can I settle dis lawsuit for fifty cents?"

"No, sir. The omnibus will be along for you in about twenty minutes. Call the next case." Detroit Free Press.

Struggling Lives.

You reader who are blessed with a comfortable home, who are well fed and warmly clad and sheltered, you can hardly realize to what straits and make shifts many a poor mortal is forced to live honestly, or even live at all. Women there are, delicate, cultured, refined, and all unused to physical labor, women nursed on or in the lap of luxury, but thrown suddenly and helplessly upon the world by some social or domestic volcano that engulfed home and friends and left them stranded and alone to struggle with the hard conditions of cruel and relentless poverty. We have seen them thinly and poorly clad, with famished faces from lack of nourishing food, boarding themselves in cheerless and isolated rooms and eking out a bare pittance honestly earned with needle or pen, patient often and hopeful in their sad, and lonely lot. Let their more fortunate sisters look to affluence and comfort, with every luxury within their reach, imagine themselves suddenly reduced to such extremities and can they wonder that many a tempted one is led into a gilded life of sin? Lady society saint of you and there is need for a larger measure of charity in the world. We wonder if the favored ones of earth are aware that there is [illegible] the goodness of one who [illegible] is sorely tempted.

Tecumseh Herald

TECUMSEH, MICH., MAR. [illegible]

A FEW FINAL WORDS.

On Monday next, the electors of Michigan will decide by their votes whether or not the prohibitory amendment shall be incorporated into our fundamental law. Never, perhaps, in the history of this commonwealth since her admission into the sisterhood of states hath a question of more transcendant importance or more far reaching consequences been present to the voters of Michigan for their decision. The position of the Herald on this issue cannot be misunderstood. We advanced a few reasons last week why Democrats should sustain this measure. To day we offer a few additional considerations of a general character for the benefit of all good citizens of every party, who seek to promote the public morality and the business prosperity of our beautiful village. Our suggestions will be confined to three topics, which can be best introduced by the following interrogatories

1. Has not the liquor traffic grown to be a social, moral and political evil which ought to be regulated and controlled in some manner?

2. Is a prohibitory law the most feasible and effectual method of controlling and curtailing the evil?

3. Would not the rigid enforcement of a prohibitory law be a positive benefit to the business interests in the cities and villages throughout the state?

First—That the traffic in intoxicating liquors, within the confines of the State of Michigan has become a gigantic evil, that threatens to undermine the foundations of society and the body politic, no impartial observer can deny. In fact, this affirmation is a self-evident truth. It admits of no serious discussion. No man, who is sane and sober, not even the beneficiaries themselves of the business will maintain for a moment that this traffic is a social and moral benefit to the community. It is universally admitted by all candid men to be an evil. And that it should be regulated in some manner is equally self evident. Not only the friends of temperance maintain this but the liquor dealers themselves admit it. They acknowledge that the business should be regulated by law, and their advocacy of license is based wholly upon the theory, that a license law is the best method of controlling the traffic. It is difficult to stir up an argument on a question upon which all people are substantially in accord. Column after column of facts and figures could be given to prove the degrading character of the business. The traffic has grown into an evil of such enormous dimensions, that its regulation by legal restrictions of some kind is imperative, not alone for the welfare of society, but, for the very existence of society.

Secondly—Whether a prohibitory law is the best instrumentality for controlling this evil is a question on which good and wise men disagree. And right here, in fact, lies the marrow of this discussion. Many men contend that such a law cannot be enforced, that public sentiment will not sustain it, in other words, that prohibition does not and cannot prohibit. On this point the enemies of prohibition can furnish many isolated examples to sustain their position. But by a parrity of reasoning it might be proven that no penal statute whatever is enforced. Murder, larceny, arson and all the crimes in the decalogue are prohibited by statute, and yet no one pretends that these laws are absolutely and literally enforced at all times and in all places. A few isolated instances prove nothing. What has been the general effect of such a law in states where the experiment has been tried? What is the general trend of public sentiment on this question? In what direction are the moral and intellectual forces of the country tending? Unquestionably in the direction of prohibition. The enforcement of any radical law of this kind always produces more or less friction at first. That is to be expected. Men who have positive views on this subject, should possess the courage of their convictions and not be frightened out of their propriety on this account. The abolition of slavery in the South produced an industrial revolution. Fortunes were blotted out in a day. Wealthy men were impoverished. Large plantations went to ruin. The temporary effect was disastrous. The years of transition to the new order of things were years of hardship, poverty and toil. And yet the Southern states to-day would not restore the "peculiar institution" if they could. A proposition submitted to the Southern people to restore slavery, would be snowed under by an overwhelming vote. Viewing this matter as a practical question simply, shunning optimistic sentimentalism on the one hand and pessimistic distrust of reform on the other, we are led to believe that the situation at present is this. In the Atlantic states where the liquor interest is entrenched by years of growth and represents millions of dollars of capital, the attempt to enforce such a law at this time would provoke a long and bitter controversy, the issue of which might be doubtful. In Ohio and Illinois the situation is somewhat similar. Ohio politics have always been dominated by the whiskey ring and the same is true of Chicago. In these localities public sentiment must be further educated before the experiment can be safely tried. But in most of the Western and Southern states, a wise prohibitory law, fairly and impartially executed, could be enforced at once without serious friction. And we believe that the time is now ripe for introducing the experiment in Michigan with the most encouraging prospects for its permanent success. We adduce in support of our assertion on this point. The state of Maine has enjoyed a prohibitory law for more than thirty years. In the last number of the Forum an article by Neal Dow gives some instructive figures showing the effects of prohibition in that state.

Speaking of Maine under license he says: "In no part of the Union were the evils of this traffic more clearly seen or felt than in Maine. The sale of liquors was free to all who chose to engage in it and the drink habit was nearly universal. Maine was in those days the poorest state in the Union."

What is Maine's condition to day? "Maine's share of the national drink bill would be now about $15,000,000, but $1,000,000 will more than cover the cost of all the liquor smuggled into the state and sold in violation of law. We save annually at least $12,000,000, which but for prohibition would be spent in drink, and fully an equal sum by the prevention of the indirect loss and waste produced by the traffic. The result of this is seen in great prosperity everywhere in the State, and it is a permanent benefit to-day, not a deception and sham."

The Maine State Sentinel says:

In the face of the cry of hard times and lack of money in other States, the State Bank Examiner of Maine reports that during the past six months the deposits in savings banks have increased $1,082,347.63. The total deposits, which are mostly from working people, amount to $35,996,182.84. It should be borne in mind that Maine has a poor soil and but few natural resources. . . . These unanswerable facts from the savings banks of the State, demonstrate that Prohibition is the real practical friend of the working men, and should be a fundamental plank in their platform of principles.

Ex Gov. Dingley says:

In 1830 thirteen distilleries in the State manufactured 1,000,000 gallons of rum; 300,000 gallons were imported. Now there is not a distillery or brewery in the State. In 1835 there were 500 taverns, all but 40 of these having open bars; now there is not a tavern in the State with an open bar. In 1830 every grocery store sold liquor as freely as molasses; now not one. In 1832, with a population of only 450,000, there were 2,000 places where intoxicating liquors were sold. Their sales amounted to $10,000,000 annually, or $20 for each inhabitant. Last year the aggregate sales of 100 town agencies was $100,000, or 15 cents per inhabitant. . . . on the average in the remainder of the Union $14 per inhabitant.

Ex-Vice President Hamlin says:

Of the great good produced by the prohibitory liquor law of Maine no man can doubt who has seen its results.

U. S. Senator Frye says:

I can and do, from my own personal observation, unhesitatingly affirm that the consumption of intoxicating liquors is not, to-lay one-fourth so great as it was twenty years ago, that the law has itself created a temperance sentiment to which opposition is powerless.

Here is an array of facts and figures from the most trustworthy sources, the correctness of which cannot be disputed or questioned. In Kansas and Iowa, the cause is slowly in some large towns, but surely and inevitably marching on to the goal of success. The liquor dealers are still fighting against fate in a few cities, but the business has been driven from a large majority of the counties in both states. The friends of the law are in earnest and are meeting the violators of the law at every point. Here is some evidence from these two states.

Under its working, Kansas has increased in population from about 950,000 in 1880, when the law was passed, up to about 1,500,000 at this date."

The leading opposer to this law, Mr. John Walruff, who run a brewery for the manufacture of "Stomach Bitters," gave the following advice to a man who wanted to go into a saloon: "I would not advise you to come to Kansas and open a saloon as long as the present law exists. You will certainly get prosecuted and go at least 30 days to the cooler."

The Chicago News recently interrogated all the probate judges in Kansas concerning the workings of the Prohibitory liquor law in the several counties of that state. Forty-nine of these officials responded, and their names and addresses are given in full. We have not room to copy them, but their responses indicate temperance progress under Prohibition, such as ought to encourage Prohibitionists everywhere. To the question, "How does the number of saloons in your vicinity and the amount of alcoholic beverages sold at this time compare with the number of saloons and the sales prior to the adoption of Prohibition measures?" such answers as these referring to counties, were returned: "Before Prohibition, twelve saloons; none now; liquor sold decreased one half." "No open saloon; amount of liquor sold greatly reduced." "We had sixty saloons; none now—closed, front and rear." "Drunkenness almost a thing of the past." "Not one twentieth as much liquor sold and drank as before the law went into effect." "No saloons; sales prior to adoption of amendment twenty times present amount." "Not one-tenth the liquor sold." "Sales not as great." "Very much less sold." "One saloon in days of the old dram shop act would sell more than all the twenty five, or thirty." "Druggists combined liquor sold, population increased one third." "Sales fifty per cent less." "Decreased seventy-five per cent." "But little drunkenness is seen." "No open saloons within 100 miles, amount of liquor diminishing fast."

What is the testimony from Iowa? The State Register publishes these reports from the various towns.

MUSCATINE.—"The saloon keepers feel very uneasy, and are seeking the advice of attorneys as to whether they had better close up or not. A saloon can be closed in twenty-four hours under the late decision."

DEWITT.—"Attorneys are of the opinion that there is no longer any hope of legal victory for the saloon keepers. There are forty three cases pending in the courts. Prohibitionists are greatly elated."

CLARINDA.—"A temperance society has been had in Harlan, and the four saloons which have been selling liquor on the sly, have closed voluntarily. The Temperance Alliance is strong and wide awake, and will vigorously apply the law wherever needed."

WEBSTER CITY.—"The temperance people have become thoroughly aroused, and are actively in concert, with the fullest determination to enforce the law."

DENISON.—"The decision has had immediate effect. The liquor men themselves say they will prosecute any one who sells a drop. One firm has shipped back to Council Bluffs the liquors that it had on hand."

DECORAH.—"Last Thursday three of the saloons here closed down voluntarily."

RENY.—"All four saloons here are closed now, and the good work will go on until the law we have will have a fair trial."

CRESTON.—"Saturday night, all the saloons here voluntarily closed their doors."

The Chicago Tribune of March 3d inst. contains this dispatch.

DES MOINES, March 3.—George W. Kidd, of New York City, owner of the International distillery here, has issued orders to the Superintendent to stop buying grain, and to see that the amount on hand is disposed of either by consumption or sale by June 1. Mr. Kidd says he will close the distillery at that time and not attempt to operate it further under the Prohibitory law. This closes the last distillery in Iowa.

Literally speaking, prohibition may not absolutely prohibit in every city and town of those states to day. Comparatively speaking, when comparing their condition now with what it was under a license law, they have taken a gigantic stride forward in the right direction, and the day is rapidly approaching when the law will be rigidly and universally enforced.

In hundreds of counties all over the South prohibition is an absolute and unconditional success at the present time. The progress of this movement in the South is one of the political marvels of the century. The wonderful prosperous boom which is now sweeping over her hills and valleys has no parallel in modern history. The rapid recuperation of the South during the past five years reads like a fairy tale, and in our judgment, it is attributable in great measure to the fact that temperance reform has kept pace with industrial and political reform in that section of the Union.

Atlanta is the largest town in Georgia. It is a booming, bustling city, exactly the kind of a town in which one would expect that the liquor interests would rule with an iron hand. Here is a scrap of significant evidence from Atlanta, taken from the address of Hon. Geo. Hillyer, upon retiring from the mayoralty on the 4th of January.

"Allusion has been made in print to alleged prosperity in other cities where the liquor traffic is still tolerated. I assert confidently that Atlanta has prospered more than any of them in our State, and I think it highly probable that Atlanta has, during the last two years, advanced and increased more in houses built, and population, and in general elements of prosperity than the five of the next largest cities in Georgia, that hold on to the bar rooms, put together. Is there any other city, where they have bar rooms, that has a surplus of over $225,000 in the treasury, on a clean balance sheet, at the end of the year, and can sell four and one-half per cent. bonds at par? If I had found the city free from bar rooms, and was retiring with bar rooms re established in it, I would be a miserable man the balance of my days. I found the city with near 130 bar rooms. I leave it with none. When I remember the acrimony and fierceness of the contest by which the result came about, but that not a solitary tragedy, or riot, or anything to bring reproach on the good name of our fair city occurred, that wounded feelings have healed, and all are again practically united, I am thrilled with pride to be one of such a people, and with gratitude to the Giver of all good, who holds our destinies in His hands, and who doeth all things well."

The friends of temperance should not be discouraged if these laws are not enforced absolutely and immediately after their passage. All great reforms move slowly. The wisest political measures sometimes encounter violent opposition and require years of agitation to engraft them on the statute book. Public sentiment must be educated. Men who are injured by a revolution of this kind, will naturally fight it, and they must have time to reorganize their business and change their investments. But a firm and persistent effort will finally result in a practical enforcement of the law. We believe that the public sentiment of our state to-day demands the enactment of such a law, and believe that the same public sentiment will enforce it when enacted. Prohibition is certainly the only effectual method of curtailing the traffic. License is a sham. They leave the business practically uncontrolled.

Prohibition can and does prohibit where it has been faithfully tried. It can and will prohibit in this state if the amendment shall be adopted.

"But," says the objector, "we tried the experiment once in Michigan and it failed." There were many causes for that failure which do not exist to-day. The law was passed in 1875 and during those two years it closed every distillery in the state and a large majority of the saloons. In 1877 it was amended so as to exclude beer, wine and cider. This change practically killed the law. The beer change brought the saloon again, and all kinds of liquor were sold under the sanction of that clause. In 1861, the rebellion came on and for four years the nation was struggling in the throes of a mighty civil war. Churches, schools, and all political reforms languished, but the liquor traffic flourished. But 1867 and 1887 are two different dates in the calendar of this century. During the past twenty years, the people have progressed forwards and not backwards. Public sentiment has crystallized very rapidly in favor of this reform, even during the past ten years, and the time has now arrived when the experiment can be safely and successfully tried.

Thirdly—That the rigid enforcement of a prohibitory law throughout the state would result in immeasurable benefit to honest and legitimate business is almost a truism. Trade or business is due to the relationship of supply and demand. People need food to eat, clothing to wear, furniture for their houses, lumber for new buildings, hardware, musical instruments, notions and numberless articles with which to make the home happy. The demand for all these things causes traders to embark in the various lines of trade and thus supply the demand. The volume of business transacted in any town depends on the amount the people want and are able to pay for. Business is helped when the demand increases and the people have more money to spend; it is injured when the demand decreases and money is scarce.

Keeping these facts in mind, let us ask what is the inevitable effect of the liquor traffic upon honest trade?

1. It decreases the demand for honest merchandise. The man who squanders $100 a year for strong drink, spends that much less for breadstuffs, meat, clothes, books, tools and furniture. And more over, the man who becomes a devotee of strong drink is the one who leaves his honest store bills unpaid. Who is it, that spends his money in the saloons and lets his grocer whistle for his account? Who is it, whose house goes unfurnished that his earnings may go into the saloon keeper's till? Who is it, that rents some old hovel year after year, when his earnings, carefully saved, would build a fine home of his own? Who is it that lets his paper run three or four years unpaid and then concludes to "stoppit" because he can't stand the expense? Every drinking man squanders money that would be used for other purposes if this sink hole of expenditure could be plugged up.

2. It cripples the productive power of every industry. Mr. Wm. Hayden and Mr. Albert Brewer manage the two largest manufacturing industries in Tecumseh. They wear different party labels, but no two men in our village are more highly esteemed by their fellow citizens. Will you kindly take the stand, gentlemen, and allow us to ask you a few questions? Who are the men in your employ, whom you retain year after year through flush times and dull times alike? Who are the men who put in six days each week and earn their wages faithfully? Who are the men that are "unprofitable" hands, and who always lose a fraction of each week? Who are the men, that are dropped from the pay roll when work is slack and are thus compelled to shift around, perhaps for days or weeks before finding another job? Every intelligent man knows what your reply would be.

It burdens business with heavy taxes. It is a safe estimate to make that seventy-five per cent. of all police expenses, taxes for prisons, asylums and poor houses are the direct result of this traffic. Wipe out the traffic and you will be relieved from this burden.

The drunk bill of Michigan last year was about $2,000,000. If the liquor business was destroyed this vast revenue would not be idle, it would not be thrown into sea or buried in the sand. Capt Kidd does not flourish in this age. It would be diverted into the channels of honorable, legitimate trade. The grocer would sell more groceries, the dry goods merchant more dry goods, the lumber dealer more building material, the hardware and furniture men would furnish more houses, the clothier would sell more suits. Every honest trade without an exception would feel the stimulus of such a revolution. What! every trade? Excuse us, every one except that of the undertaker.

A PERTINENT INQUIRY.

Well, what are the views
Of the Tecumseh News,
On the subject of prohibition?
Does it stand, in the fight,
For justice and right,
And for bettering man's condition?

Does it stand for the cause
Of righteous laws
That will elevate society?
With heart and hand,
Does it boldly stand
For temperance and sobriety?

Does the editor know
That our State's aglow
With the fires of true reform?
That her vales and hills,
Rocks, rivers and rills
Are reeling like oaks in a storm?

Then what is his choice?
Does he raise his voice
Home and his Native land?
And to free the state
From the fearful fate
Of the rum seller's bloody hand?

Or is he content
To skulk in his tent?
And, oiling the joints of the knee,
To say, with a smile,
To the beer-seller—"I'll Just tickle you and you tickle me."

A Rousing Meeting.

The prohibition meeting last Thursday evening, addressed by John B. Finch, was the most effective meeting that has been held here since the campaign opened. Mr. Finch is a great lawyer, a very persuasive speaker, and has made the subject a study. He is thoroughly equipped for the fray and is not afraid to handle his arguments without gloves. Duffield's recent speech in favor of license came down the Tuesday's papers, and Mr. Finch at once telegraphed to prominent men in the prohibition states, requesting their views on some leading points. He received a large number of replies during the day here at Tecumseh, which he read during his address. It was the most convincing array of knock-down evidence, coined on the spur of the moment, presented at a public gathering in this village. The Opera House was crowded to repletion, and even standing room was at a discount. The reading of these telegrams took the audience by storm. The bill for telegrams, which Newberry Satterthwaite contracted, amounted to $37.50. The hat for a collection at the close of the meeting, yielded a grand response. The following persons threw in these large amounts: O. B. DeWolf, $5; Sargeson, $5; A. P. Coddington, $5; P. Brown, $5; G. P. Waring, $5; Stewart, $5; Jno. B. Finch, $20; Doryell, $5. These with the hat collection raised the aggregate to $100.00. The meeting produced excellent effect and amendment has been above par in this community since.

We learn that three of our Tecumseh youths attended the examination at Adrian last week, for the vacant cadet-ship at Annapolis. They were Alfred Heesen, Will Bidwell and Will Hall. Master Consaul, of Hudson, was marked two points higher than Al. or Tecumseh would have had a cadet at Annapolis.

Last Saturday evening the G. A. R. gave one of their surprises at A. P. Coddington's. Elijah King came walking in our office yesterday with a kingly tread and a small box under his arm suggesting something mysterious. Upon opening the aforesaid box, two common sized eggs were discovered connected with a piece of shell. Brownville experienced a slight fire Monday evening which did a small amount of damage. A little building back of Wm. Bresie's residence is used by Mrs. Crowell's boy as a printing office and a fire had been in a stove there all day. As the family were eating supper, smoke was seen coming from the building and but for prompt attention a serious fire would have been the result. A little water soon quenched the flames which were burning near the stove and the loss was only a hole in the floor and some wet type cases.

The next meeting of the Myrtle Club will be held at the residence of Elias Brown, in Raisin, on Thursday evening, April 7. A necktie social will be given, with a literary program.
C. C. MONAGHAN, Sec'y.

Hon. and Mrs. M. A. O. Packard have engaged passage on the steamer Etruria, which leaves New York for Liverpool, April 30. They will make the tour of Europe, and may possibly visit the Holy Land. Mr. Packard was a former resident of Tecumseh, and is a nephew of Mrs. P. R. Adams.

The W. C. T. U. ladies, after carefully investigating the question, of free lunch at the polls on election day, decided it was impracticable on account of lack of room, and will devote their whole time to the distributing of ballots for the amendment, and temperance literature.

The Coronet handsomely distanced the Dauntless in the ocean yacht race. Both yachts encountered very severe weather and the wonder is that they didn't go to the bottom. It must be fun for those who engage in it, but the average land lubber, we opine, will prefer to rest on terra firma during the month of March, than to be racing across the Atlantic in a sail boat.

Gilmore's celebrated band will visit Adrian on Monday, April 4th. This organization needs no special words to advertise it. It is well known as one of the finest musical combinations in America. The Jackson train will be held an hour to accommodate all who wish to go from this direction, and many will doubtless avail themselves of this privilege.

Will you be there and hear the address by that able and prominent temperance worker from Philadelphia the Rev. D. C. Babcock, who will speak upon the submission of the Prohibitory amendment in the Opera House at Tecumseh, on Friday evening, April 1st, 1887. An excellent male Quartette, sent out by Oberlin College, will be with him, and add greatly to the interest of the meeting by singing several of the most popular temperance songs of the day. Remember the date, and come early to secure a seat. By order of Tecumseh Amendment Committee.

WHERE DOES HE STAND?

The youthful and handsome editor of the Tecumseh News is on the gain. In the HERALD of the 17th, the young man stimulated up last week with an extra glass of milk and water and penned a half column editorial in reply. We are glad to note that our youthful contemporary is cultivating the muses, and that Thalia seems to be his favorite. The goddess of wit and humor is a kindly assistant in the editorial sanctum, and is sometimes a very helpful one, especially to youth[illegible] from the task of discussing great public questions. Some portions of the reply were doubtless intended to be facetious. If the young man had kindly noted the funny portions, we would have gladly copied them and given him the benefit of our circulation as we believe in encouraging youthful manifestations of genius. But the editorial, notwithstanding its literary and humorous excellence, fails to disclose the youthful editor's position on the great question now agitating the public mind. Where does he stand on prohibition? Has he got any convictions of his own on that subject? Or does he consider it policy to keep "mum" until the storm blows over? Tyros in the business frequently labor under the hallucination that an editor should entertain no views of his own on any subject. Still we are pleased to see that the young man is improving. Industry and perseverance will enable him to grow into proper appreciation of his calling in time. If he shall absorb as much wisdom during the next fifty years as he has since the first issue of the News in Tecumseh, his present nebulous views on temperance reform will undoubtedly crystalize into positive convictions and he will be enabled to express them in a witty and forcible manner. Then let the young man persevere in well doing. We remove our tile, make our politest obeisance and heartily extend to our youthful and handsome contemporary, the HERALD'S best wishes for his ultimate success.

NORTHERN LENAWEE FARMERS' CLUB.

The last evening meeting for the season was held at Mrs. Almira McCollum's, on March 16th and was one of the best held both in literary program and discussion of Question, "What is the best and cheapest fence to build."

James Updyke, Jr., was to open the discussion, but as he did not put in an appearance, Scott Remington took the lead. Mr. Remington commenced by saying the fence tax was a heavy one, being more than all other taxes combined, can't avoid fencing but thought we might have permanent pasture, and then fence pasture and not fence land under the plow. There is six kinds of fences in general use. rail fence the best: barbed wire cheapest, hedge fence too expensive to build. His individual choice is barbed wire.

F. W. DePuy. I don't like barbed wire; best fence to build is slats and wire; we have too much fence on our farms; would put a permanent fence around outside and have portable fences for cross fences, so we could move them.

A. Barns. Would give the barbed wire a black eye and bloody nose, the poorest fence built. Snow banks will break wires, and the heat and cold effects it too much.

L. M. Waldron. On all 80 acre farms the fences occupy 3½ acres of land, ½ acre less if straight fence is used. I think picket fence best. Hedge fence takes more ground than any other; have seen some good hedge fences on prairies out west. For posts think we can use gas-pipe.

W. B. Keyser. Object to any fence that requires a wooden post to rot off, therefore like the zigzag rail fence best. The Russel patent fence is worthy of trial. Think the coming fence will be a woven wire fence with iron posts.

J. F. N. Bowen. The fence question will puzzle the coming generations. If the hedge fence has proper care it might make a good fence, but while we can get rails at from 40 to 45 dollars per thousand they are the cheapest material to build fences of. Think the future fence will be made of iron.

O. P. Remington. I would like to see a perfect hedge fence all that I have seem was patched up with old rails. Question—Have any of you ever seen a perfect hedge fence? Ans.—by Waldron and Talman in the aff. and cited to where such could be seen.

The next meeting will be an afternoon meeting, at Martin Updyke's, on April 6th, at 1 o'clock, with the following program:

FARMER'S UNION CLUB.

The Farmer's Union Club met according to previous adjournment at [illegible] usual large attendance. The literary part of the program was shorter than usual, as four that were to take part, were absent.

The discussion was opened by Mr. W. F. Raymond on the affirmative. He said There was three times as much money invested in farms as in other business. The activity and prosperity of all other business depends on the farmer. Our nation has received its greatest men from those of the soil, and the farmer with his winters of comparative leisure, has an opportunity for self improvement and culture, the value of which cannot be estimated [illegible]

Mr. W. C. Hopkins on the negative, said: There were many kinds of business more profitable than farming, and it requires more constant supervision than other business. He gave the expense of raising a bushel of wheat, and at present prices, showed it be far from profitable. He stated that according to U. S. statistics, each person engaged in farming was entitled to one hundred and forty-five dollars, not as profit, but as the whole allowance.

Mr. Dubois. When a farm is not profitable, something is wrong with the farmer. In other business there is often two hundred and thirty failures in seven days. Farmers are seldom successful when they engage in other business, but on their farms can raise nearly all that is necessary to provide their homes with comfort and plenty.

Mr. R. VanNess. Farmers meekly take the price offered them for their produce, with scarcely a voice in the matter, and the same in buying. Farmers are not making money, and at present farm labor receives more profit on the amount invested than the farmer himself.

Mrs. M. Smeltzer. There is no business that in profit can compare with farming, but it is not more easy to learn, than any other business. To be successful in this branch of industry requires many years of apprenticeship and persistent endeavor.

Mrs. H. B. Eaton maintained that since Adam commenced farming, thorns, thistles and weeds have grown with greater ease and abundance than corn, oats and wheat, and in comparison with the results of some of our speculations, the farm is not profitable.

The discussion was spicy and was listened to with interest. The committee decided in favor of the affirmative. The next meeting will be at M. Smeltzer's, Friday, evening, April 8th.

COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS.

VILLAGE OF TECUMSEH,
COUNCIL ROOM, MARCH 28, 1887.

Special Session, convened to consider certain matters in reference to the use of the council building.

Present, the entire council except Mr. Heck.

After some discussion the following resolution was unanimously adopted.

WHEREAS the common council of this village, on the 17th day of Aug. 1885, passed the following resolution: Resolved that until further action by the council, the use of the council building be restricted to the purposes of the corporation, and that the chairman of the committee on public grounds and buildings is requested to so notify the Tecumseh Cornet Band." And whereas no further different action has since been taken by the council, and

WHEREAS the building was erected by the tax payers of this village for the general use of the public in its government and for purposes in which the general public are equally interested, and that permitting it to be used for purposes private in their nature, and in which the general tax payers are not equal beneficiaries, is unjust and contrary to the purposes for which it was erected, and tends to establish a precedent which may lead to unknown difficulties.

Be it Resolved, That the use of the council building be and is hereby henceforth restricted to purposes involving the government and protection of the citizens of the Village and Township of Tecumseh, and to only such other purposes that are general and common interest to such citizens.

On motion, the council adjourned.

OBITUARY.

Death has again entered our midst and taken from among us one of our pioneer citizens. After a lingering illness on Monday morning, March 21st, departed this life at the ripe age of 81 years and 1 month, David Hatch, who has been a resident of this community for nearly 48 yrs., having bought his home farm, where he spent his last days, when it was new land and by industry and economy he cleared and beautified and added to it and prepared for himself a comfortable home, in which to spend his declining years.

By the death of David Hatch this community loses a good and upright man, whose ear was ever open to the cries of the suffering and needy and whose hand was always ready to extend help.

The funeral was held March 24th at the Baptist church which was filled to overflowing by neighbors and friends who came to pay their tribute of respect. In fulfillment of a promise made years ago, the services were conducted by the Rev. John Maynard of Sparta, Mich., who preached an earnest and able sermon from the text "To whom shall we go unto Thee, Thou hast the words of eternal life" and referred feelingly to the kindly traits of character possessed by his old and tried friend. His remains were interred in the Macon cemetery by the side of those of friends who had gone on before.

David Hatch was born in Picton, Nova Scotia, Feb. 21st 1806, where he spent his boyhood, came to Michigan in 1837, located in Macon in 1839, where he spent the remainder of his life. He leaves three children to mourn his loss. James D. Hatch, of Macon; Mrs. Wm. M. Hastings, of Denver Colorado, and Samuel Hatch, of Macon (late of Detroit.)

An appropriate sermon for Palm Sunday will be given at the Universalist church, next Sunday morning, April 3d, at 10:30.

Mr. E. H. Custer, after a pleasant visit of several weeks at Lt. Elliott Gray's, returned to his home in Monroe last Thursday. He wishes to be on hand to vote next Monday.

Owing to the pressure on our columns of amendment articles this week, our report of the school examinations and special meeting are laid over till next week.

All medical authorities agree that catarrh is a more or less than an inflammation of the living membrane of the nasal air passages. Nasal catarrh and all catarrhal affections of the head are not diseases of the blood, and it is a serious mistake to treat them as such. No conscientious physician ever attempts to do so. It is held by eminent medical men that sooner or later a specific will be found for every disease from which humanity suffers. The facts justify us in assuming that for catarrh at least a positive cure already exists in Ely's Cream Balm.

Discoveries Made by Accident.

Valuable discoveries have been made, [illegible] suggested by the veriest accident.

The swaying to and fro of a chandelier in a cathedral suggested to Galileo the application of the pendulum.

Mozart owed his prevalence to the [illegible] of the girl horses of a carriage [illegible]

An artist, while seeking to discover a mixture of paints that would mock the most delicate shades, happily found that he had made potatoes.

The power of steam as applied to the locomotive was discovered in a search [illegible]

[illegible] the paddle went with it [illegible] the grocery [illegible] the mass [illegible] disorder.

[illegible] a boy was [illegible] the paddle [illegible] sugar house. She left [illegible] of sugar. It was no [illegible] were the sugar was whitened. Experiments were [illegible] and the result was that water [illegible] in refining sugar.

The art of etching upon glass was discovered [illegible] A boy [illegible] the paddle went with it [illegible] sugar house. She left [illegible] of sugar. It was no [illegible] were the sugar was whitened. Experiments were [illegible] and the result was that water [illegible] in refining sugar.

[illegible] upon glass was discovered [illegible] A boy [illegible] the paddle went with it [illegible] sugar house. She left [illegible] of sugar. It was no [illegible] were the sugar was whitened. Experiments were [illegible] and the result was that water [illegible] in refining sugar.

[illegible] drops of acid fortuitously fell upon a pane of glass [illegible] the spot [illegible] corroded and destroyed where it had touched it. That was [illegible] enough. He drew figures upon glass with [illegible] applied the corroding fluid, then washed away the glass around the drawing. When the varnish was removed the figure appeared raised upon a dark ground [illegible]

[illegible] of Pandytoot, was destroyed by fire. While he was gazing doleefully into the smouldering ruins, he noticed that the poor little urchins were gathering the snuff from the canisters. He tested the snuff [illegible] and discovered that the fire had greatly improved its pungency and aroma. It was a hint worth profiting by. He secured another shop, built a lot of ovens, subjected the snuff to a roasting process, gave the brand a particular name, and in a few years became rich through an accident which he at first thought had completely ruined him.

The art of lithographing was perfected through suggestions made by accident. A poor musician was curious to know whether music could not be etched upon stone as well as upon copper. After he had prepared his slab, his mother asked him to make a memorandum of such clothes as she proposed sending away to be washed. Not having pen, ink and paper convenient, he wrote the list on the stone with the etching preparation, intending to make a copy of it at leisure. A few days later, when about to clean the stone, he wondered what effect aqua fortis would have upon it. He applied the acid, and in a few minutes saw the writing standing out in relief. The next step necessary was simply to ink the stone and take off an impression.

A Brighton stationer took a fancy for dressing his show-window with piles of writing paper, rising gradually from the largest to the smallest size in use, and to finish his pyramid of neatness, he cut cards to bring them to a point. Taking these cards for diminutive note-paper, lady customers were continually wanting some of "that lovely little paper," and the stationer found it advantageous to cut paper to the desired pattern. As there was no space for addressing the pocklets after they were folded, he after [illegible] thought, invented the envelope, which he cut by the aid of metal plates made for the purpose. The sale increased so rapidly that he was unable to produce the envelopes fast enough, so he commissioned a dozen houses to make them for him, and thus set going an important branch of the manufacturing stationary trade.

Weight by Measuring.

The following rule for finding out the weight of an animal by measuring may prove convenient: "See that the animal stands square; then take his circumference behind the shoulder-blade—this is the girth. Then measure from the bone of the tail which plumbs the line with the hinder part of the buttock, and direct the string along the back to the forepart of the shoulder-blade; this will be the length. Then work the figures thus. Suppose the girth of bullock 6 feet 4 inches, length 5 feet 3 inches. Which multiplied together make 33 square superficial feet; and these multiplied by 23—the number of pounds allowed for each superficial foot of cattle measuring less than seven and more than five feet in girth make 759 pounds. When the animal measures less than nine and more than seven feet in girth, 31 is the number of pounds to be estimated for each superficial foot. And suppose a small animal to measure 2 feet in girth and 2 feet in length, these multiplied together make 4 feet, which multiplied by 11—the number of pounds allowed for each square foot where cattle measure less than 3 feet in girth—make 44 pounds. Again suppose a calf or sheep etc., to measure 4 feet 6 inches in girth and 3 feet 9 inches in length that multiplied together makes 16 square feet, and these multiplied by 16—the number of pounds allowed for cattle measuring less than 5 and more than 3 feet in girth—make 256 pounds. The dimensions of cattle, sheep, calves and hogs taken this way will give the weight of the four quarters of the animal, sinking the offal. A deduction must be made for animals half fat, of one pound in twenty from those that are fat; and for a cow that has had calves one pound must be allowed in addition to the one for not being fat, upon every twenty."

I stumbled on an old farmer back in the country whom I had not seen for several years and whose farm, in the meantime, had improved wonderfully, that his place was so changed I hardly knew it. "Yes," said he, "I've been fixin' up a little. The old woman pestered me to death about the garden, and so I shucked it up a little, and fixed about the house, and it looked so nice I went at the farm fences and the brush and saved more manure, and kept killing the weeds, and the crops got better, and so I kept going on, and things do look pretty good now. Wife takes a paper, and I take one, and I get time to read it too, and I used to think that I hadn't time for anything." And so he ran on, seemingly much pleased with what he had done, and his life and his home without doubt the happier for it. Examples of a like kind may be found all over the country.

Does Farming Pay?

An impression somewhat general seems to prevail that farming is not as profitable as other vocations, that more money can be earned with less labor, hence the farmer's son abandons the farm where he is a success, for the uncertain gains of town.

This impression, it seems to me, is very far from the truth. Take the farmers in some one of the West most of them commenced life poor, if they have succeeded there is to legitimate farming and avoided speculation, in most cases they are well situated, and are far more comfortable than an equal number of associates who chose the town. Facts sustain me on the assertion and out of our hundred young men who [illegible] more than one between twenty [illegible] and have [illegible] hardly making living. Out of that hundred young men who remain on the farm probably not one hundred would be more happy or even have sufficient [illegible] and good houses, while [illegible] of the scramble make a good living.

[illegible] to my impression is that average young men are far more likely to succeed on the farm than in the towns although they may not actually make more money. One thing that has allured many from the farm is society, and schools may be added. In these particulars a marked difference can be observed within a few years to the credit of the country. Farm houses and surroundings are more beautiful; the sons are making of culture and the daughters are accomplished in the elegant as well as the useful; society in the country is no longer rude; it lacks some of the grace of the city but more than compensated by solid acquirements and an honest welcome characteristic of a high-bred people. The turning point has undoubtedly been passed and the future great men of this nation will be farmers.—Knapp.

Visiting—Hired Girls.

Once on a time I went to spend the afternoon with a neighbor friend, and my visit turned out nothing but apologies, with now and then something said between. She said she had put on baking on account of some sewing she wanted to finish, and thought she would bake in the afternoon. She had to chase the hens and search the barn to get some eggs to bake a cake as the day before she had sent all she had to market. And then all her wood was out doors in the rain and snow, and was slow to burn; consequently the cake got sad before it was baked. Her knives and forks she had laid aside in the morning; they then had to be scoured, and then as soon as it got a little dusk she thought of her lamp, which had to take its share, too. But, farmer sisters, here let me say that if ever I am found in such a fix, I will make the best of it, and let visitors eat the same as I do, and try to visit one-half the time any way. I think the better way is to do all necessary work in the morning, and let sewing go until afternoon, as nine-tenths of the visiting people would rather have their chat and partake of a cup of good hot coffee, and plain bread and butter, than to have nick-nacks.

I always have thought that housewives needed help just as much as the men, and think so yet. Let a man get in a hurry and his first thought is, hire a man to help him out, and it is all right. And how many are the times that his worked-down wife is hurried and worried and no help ever thought of for her; and if she should speak of hiring a girl at two dollars a week, one and a half a week, the man will say "This girl business counts up like Sam Hill." All this time he keeps his man week in and week out, costing him from five to six dollars a week, and only works from sun to sun, while a girl works from sun until sen at night.—Gemina Bedot.

A Possible Relic of De Soto.

The Tallahassee (Fla.) Floridian says: A few years ago, about two miles east of Tallahassee, was found a ponderous spur, of unique and curious workmanship, the like of which has not been seen in modern times. The burr was one and a half inches in diameter, and the bar proportionately heavy. On either side of the rowel dangled small pendant bells, that gave forth a tinkling sound in response to each step of the wearer—doubtless some steel-clad and mounted warrior of the long ago. Not many days since, while parties were plowing near the identical spot, a solid and shapeless mass was turned up, which, upon close examination, proved to be an iron stirrup of ancient pattern, as heavy and as massive as the spur spoken of first, and firmly imbedded in a thick coating of clay and rust. When this was removed, the stirrup was found to be in a remarkable good state of preservation. The sides represent two Ethiopian figures standing upon the foot-rest, leaning forward facing each other, while they support with outstretched arms what forms the top of the stirrup, or that part connected with the leather; so unlike are both these relics to anything known to the generations of the day and time, and both being found so near the same place, it is not unreasonable to ascribe them to the same era and individual. Nor is the supposition at all improbable that one of the knightly followers of De Soto lured on through this then unknown region and wilderness, like that dauntless son of Spain, by a thirst for the yellow heaps of glittering gold that loomed up ahead of them in vain visions and heated fancies, here fell a victim to the tomahawk and scalping knife of the wronged and revengeful red; and no doubt some one of the "Tallahassee Tribe," of which Tiger Tail claimed to be a descendant, boasted as he displayed at his belt a bloody scalp, that he had "killed a pale face."
